EPISTLE TO THE READER.

Courteous Reader,

Do here present thee with a History of Brutes, a Piece that hath been long expected: Collected out of the most Approved Authors which have written of this Subject: Written Ori-Az ginally

ginally in Latine, by Wolfgangus Franzius Professor of Divinity in the University of Witteberg, aman famous, in his time, for his great Learning: The Book is, by the Author, divided into five Parts. In the first Part, be at large treats of the Nature of all fourtooted Beasts; first, setting down the Properties, and then deducing several Corollaries, which is the method be uleth throughout the Book; alwaies mentioning some apt place of Scripture where it is spoken of, from whence be infers them.

In the second Part, he discourseth only of the Nature of Volatil's; in the third, of Fishes; the fourth Part is a full description of Serpents; and the fifth, of Insects. I have here translated only the first Part, which treats only of the Nature of four-footed Beasts, having the other by me; which, if it find acceptance, may speedily be put in the Press. I bave The Epistle, &c.

have one Request to thee, which is, not to charge the Author with those faults which possibly thou maist find in the perusal, having not leifure to correct it my self. If thou shalt find as much pleasure in reading, as I have had in the writing of it; We shall neither of us to e our pains.

CHAP. I.

The Argument of the Treatife.

He History of Brutes, which by some is not unfitly called, Ζωογεάφια, or a Description of living creatures, is that part of Phylicks which treateth of Brute beafts. We may properly call this one part of Phylicks, because it treateth of the nature of things; for Physicks is either Physicks properly so called, or you may divide it into Metaphysicks, and Mathematicks. Physicks properly so called comprehendeth under it the nature of Meteors, Metals, Plants, Stars, the four Elements, men, and Brutes. Some would have the confideration of Brutes be brought under Medicine, which I think belongeth more properly to Philosophy for here in this treatife of Animals you have the nature, property, motions, generation, strength, shape and use of Brutes. But I shall a little shew the use and benefit that this treatise will be of, not only to physicians, but also to all scholars, and more especially to Divines; for confider ;

1. The dignity of it, which Authors tel us, in any art or science, ariseth from the efficient cause, or the object: The inventors of this science have been learned and pious men in all ages, Gen. 2. 20. Adam gave names suitable to all creatures. ch. 6. v. 20. 21. Noah in the Ark did not only behold the creatures, but was commanded to provide food for them. Gen. 36. 34. We find several holy men in scripture who were shepherds. Gen. 13. 57.—37. 2. Exod. 10. 9. 1. Sam. 16. 11.—17.34. We read that Solomon wrote of Fishes, Birds, and Beasts. 1. Kings. 4. 33. We read of Alexander, that he gave 80. talents to Aristotle to instruct him in the knowledge of Creatures, and had a 1000. men in Asia and Greece, who were employed in fishing and hunting, thereby to be informed of the nature of Creatures. Which was the reason of Aristotles writing his History of Animals. The advantages we have from this kind of knowledge is not only for dispute, but also for the explication of Authors as well Sacred as Prophane. It bringeth also much glory to God.

1. We shall find it very useful in sermons. For from hence we may deduce many profitable inserences. It is fit to know lest we commit an error; Democritus was laughed at by Aristotle, who asking him what was the reason that a dog alwayes lay upon the same stone, answered, because he had some thing in him like a stone. We find Virgil bringing a Hart of Africa to prove what he said, when there are none there; thus he bringeth in the wild asses of Italy when there are none there. It is no less useful also in the explication of Prophane Authors as well as Sacred. The Priest in the Law was very well skilled in the nature of all food, he being to instruct the people.

of the lawfulness, and unlawfulnes of meats. Dan. 7. we read that Monarchies are compared to beafts, as the Chaldean to a Lyon, the Persian to a bear, the Grecian to a fox, the Roman to a beast with many heads and horns. Dan. 8. 3. we find [in Tobit] the Persian Empire compared to a Ram, and the Grecian to a goat; we read many things, in Scripture of the Lyons whelp. Gen. 49. 9. 10, 11. 12. 14. 17. 21. 27. So Gen. 3, 15. many places of scripture cannot be interpreted without the knowledge of Animals. Thus for the History of Jonah, it is necessary we should be acquainted with the nature of the whale, in whose belly the Prophet was swallowed up. Thus John. 1. 29. we find Christ compared to a Lamb. Mat. 2. 16. The Holy Ghost appeared in the shape of a dove, and we are commanded to be wife as ferpents, and innocent as Doves. Mat. 7. 15. Sathan and false teachers are compared to Wolves. Mat. 24. 28. where the carcass is, there will the Eagles be gathered. Chap 23. 1. how would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens! Thus David. Pfal. 55.7. O that I had the wings of a Dove, then would I fly away. Thus we find him wishing himself a Coney and a Sparrow in several places. Pfal. 84. 4. we find the Church compared to a nest in which the Swallow and Sparrow layeth her young. So Pfal, 103. 5. David wisheth he might renew his strength as the Eagle. Examples of which are frequent in prophane Authors. But finally, the knowledge of the creature doth tend very much to the glory of God. Thus we find R 2 that the frost is called upon to praise God. Bless the Lord ye whales, and all things that move in the water praise the Lord, bless the Lord; ye fowls of the air, bless ye the Lord; man by the beholding of creatures is thereby induced to praise God, if he consider,

1. The different nature of Creatures, their beauty, magnitude, and agreement one with another.

2. The benefit of them, the least Creature being not useles to man.

3. The wonderful providence of God that is in the generation of creatures, in the places where they live: of which Job telleth us, Chap. 39.

40.41.

4. The constant use that several creatures are of to mankind, which they might easily avoid if they knew their own strength: God hath also commanded them to serve man. Gen. 1. repeated also after the flood. Chap 9.2. to have Dominion over the Beafts of the Earth.

5. The wonderful obedience of the creature to God. Thus Herod. Lib. 2. in Sennacheribs army, the Enemy being great; they despaired of victory, in one night the mice destroyed their shields and arrows, so that the next day they were forced to fly. Thus we see most of Pharaohs plagues were inslicted by Brutes: and no less wonderful is the History of Balaam's Als, Numb. 22. and of the Crow which fed the Prophet, and of the beares which destroyed those that mocked the Prophet. 2. King. 2. 24 thus we see the benefit & usefulnes of this knowledge, CHAP.

The Definition of an irrational Creature.

A Nirrational or brute creature is a body perfectly mixed, indued with life and lense; for the Genus, here is body; for the Form of it, that is two-fold.

1. It is faid to be perfectly mixed, to difference it from Meteors that are not.

2. It is indued with Life and sense, to difference it from Vegetatives which have not; so that an irrational creature consisteth of a body and soul.

Of the body of a Brute.

He body of a Brute is the collection of its feverall members and intrails, 'of fluids' as blood, of folids as flesh and bone, similar and distimilar parts; in this order all the other parts are to be explained; but we shall pass by these members which it hath in common with man, which are all explained in Melantthon, of the soul. There are many creatures which want blood, as Spiders, and Pismires, but instead of that they have fat and a fanguineous moysture, analogous to blood, which nourisheth the body, and is a vehicle to the sensitive soul. Thus Fishes have no bones properly so called, but rather thorns. Thus crabs have grisles, in Insects there seemen to be something between flesh and nerves, instead of bones. So Birds have small Measus's which are for eares, instead of teeth they have a bony bill. And for their nose small passages into the head. Thus the Sea-Calf hath his fore-feet for hands, the Elephant his snowt, Fishes and Serpents have no members of generation, but smal passages, through which the feed runneth; and the Pourcountrel, a fish so called, hath no head, but a great paunch, other creatures have no tongue that appeareth outwardly; as, the Pismire; fome creatures by a hollow spongie sting doe taste and take in the meat they eat: Fishes have no lungs living alwayes in the water, do not breathe, and so want not a neck, by which respiration is made; but they have a larger gall than other creatures to keep them warm ; fee Gods wisdom in creating those creatures that serve man with a small gall, lest by heat of choler they should be inraged against those that use them; lesser creatures have a larger gall, because we need not fear their hurting of us; nature hath also armed every sreature, some have hornes, some teeth, others have spurrs, others are swift, as the Horse, others have large bodyes as Camels. The Hedge-hog hath prickles; there is a creature called Benains, which purfued, voydeth fo much excreexcrements, that it cannot be taken. Thus a fish called the Cuttle, doth mud the water so that one cannot see her. Thus the Pourcountrel by the pellucidnes of his body changeth himself into divers colours, insects have but few members, but many feet. Their ears are moveable, that by their constant motion they might hear the better. Some creatures have teeth in one place, and some in another. Some in the roof of the mouth, some in the tongue, as Fiftes.

Crabs have two rowes of teeth, the one in their mouth, the other in their ventricle, and because they have but few bowels, from their belly to their vent they have a small pipe which some improperly call their tail, for that is necessary for those fish that swim, which a Grab doth not; those creatures that have no teeth live in a moister Element; some creatures have two ventricles as birds, they that chew the Cud have four, they feeding upon crude food which requireth great digestion, especially milch kine. God hath made lesser creatures wifer than greater, as appeareth by birds-nests and Spiders-webs. The flesh of wild creatures is more wholsome than the flesh of tame, the superfluous humors of the one being by motion dispersed, the flesh of the other being softer, but not so pure. The semales of all creaweakest; some birds have a broader tongue than others, as Parots, though every creature cannot speak, yet have distinct voices to know one another by, as Aristotle faith, Lib. 7. c.7.

of the parts of Animals. Fishes have not so broad a tongue, and fo swallow their meat quicker, lest humours meeting should stop it, and hinder the tafte; it is strange that males and females are alike for number, not more of the one than the other in men. Those creatures that bring forth living creatures have firmer bones and flesh, as Lyons, Horses, which birds have not, the dung of the one is ftronger than the other. Hairy creatures have but short tayls, Birds that feed on flesh have crooked bills. The Son hath a fnowt which serveth instead of a bill, to root up small plants; many Fishes have no bladders, their excrementitious humors being received into their tayles and finns. Bruit beafts want those members that are in a man, and what they have are not so placed as in a man.

Of the foul of a Brute.

Atural Philosophers make 3. kinds of souls, from the three kinds of Animals. Vegetative in Plants, Senstive in Brutes, Rational in Man: as for the foul of Brutes, it is not like ours, but, as the name for it fignifieth, a wind or breath. There is a kind of a warm, spirituous breath in the blood of Beafts which is their soul, by which is performed all its actions and operations; hence, Levit. 17. 11, 14. it is thrice faid, that the foul is in the blood; some members are more excellent than others, yet the foul is not in them, but in the blood which is a convenient vehicle for the vital heat. Dent. 12. 23. They were forbidden to eat the flesh with the blood thereof, because it was the life thereof. Hence we may learn to take heed of murther, the prohibition of which followeth immediately after the other command: that this is fo, appeareth,

I. Because the parts of some creatures will live after that they are cut off, and being put into the earth will draw moisture from it.

2. Because we see how the body is variously affected with the motion of the blood. Thus we fee when we are moved to anger, how the blood doth boyl in the veins. So in fear the blood doth recede from the outward parts to the inward, which causeth a paleness in the face; thus joy fendeth out the blood, and causeth a redness in the face: thus when we are ashamed we blush, so that we betray our felves in a fault, according to the old faying,

Heu quam difficile est crimen non prodere vultu.

The affections that happen in the blood are the fame that happen in man. An Ass is foolish, a Horse hot in love, and in war, and a Wolf unruly, a Lyon bold, a Fox crafty, the Dog docile, and fo other creatures I could instance in. The Tartars drink horses blood to be valiant. Those beatts that are fat are soonest old, the vehicle of their sense being taken away, viz, their blood, but a beast hath no rationall Soul, though it doth exert such actions. Gen. 9. 5. God will have the blood of man revenged on brutes, the Ox that goreth aman shall be put to death. Levit. 20. 15, 16. The creature was to be burned that was found naturally joyned with a man; the reason of all which was, that men might be deterred from killing his fellow creature. It being an argument a Minore ad Majus. If God be so angry for a beast killing a man, much more for one man killing another. Now concerning the faculties of the Soul of a brute.

1. The vegetative Faculty containeth under it,

1. Nutrition. Some Creatures feed only upon flesh, as Lyons, Wolves, others promiscuously, as Dogs. Some by prey, as Lyons and Wolves, some upon what they can get, as Pismires, and Earnigs, some get prey in the night as Wolves, others day and night, as Cats. Many brutes are not made immediatly for the use of man, but for the use of other creatures, and to mediately for the use of man. The Pilmire eateth the flesh and blood of a Toad, but leaveth the bones. Four-footed beasts eat more of these, whereby their flesh and milk is increased. Serpents endure hunger a great while, otherwise they would be injurious to man. Swallows devour Wasps, and Titte-mise. Ghats. We have many Crows, spartly to destroy all Carrion, and also to destroy those wormes which are bred in the earth, which do follow in multitudes. Pies by slitting the Barks of trees, the Wormes fall out; thus Spiders, Gnats, Serpents, do clear the air. Creatures that feed upon Mountains are the wholsomest, because the herbs herbs are driest on Mountains: God hath ordered it so, that beasts do not sleep much, because they should feed in the night-time. Some chew the cud, as oxen. Some creatures are generated by copulation, others are generated out of excrements, others both wayes, as Mice.

1. By natural conjunction are produced creatures of the same kind, as Dogs, Harts, &c. The Serpent layeth Eggs, others again generate neither by Seed nor Eggs.

2. Some creatures are generated out of rotten wood, as Wormes, lice; &c. many creatures are generated of the excrements of other creatures, others breed in the bowels of living creatures; Bees are generated out of Calves that are starved, as is noted in that History of Sampson; there is a Worm bred in the boughs of Oak, of which we make a Scarlet colour. So Gnats are generated out of Horse-dung.

3. Some Creatures are generated partly by copulation, and partly by accident, as Mice: Mice are generated in Ships, out of the putrid matter which lyeth at the bottom of the Pump. I question whether all Creatures do not lay Eggs, and whether a Hens Egg may not be hatched in a mans bosom. We see small Creatures are generated in mans Body by the heat of some parts. We find Birds to have been bred in Ships; but we leave these things to be judged of by the more learned. Those creatures that are of most use to man do generate often, and many at a time, as Doves and Hares; but others generate but seldom, and not many, as Vipers, &c. as Herodotus observeth. There are in Creatures diffinct Sexes, and they remain so. A Hare is not now a Male, anon a Female; hence we imagine so many Hermaphrodites amongst Creatures. Useful creatures are generated in a short time, as Sheep in 5 moneths time, Harts in 8 Moneths time, Oxen 9 Moneths, Sowes in 2, Dogs and Catts in 60 dayes; but Elephants 2 years; Lyons, Wolves, and Beares 3 yeares; some Creatures live longer than others, an Elephant 300, a Camel 100, a Horse 50, a Dove 40, a Peacock, 25, Oxen, Dogs, and Hogs 10, Partridges 17, Sheep 12, Goats 10, Hares and Mice, 6 yeares.

Concerning the Sensitive Power of Brutes. Brutes do excel man in feveral outward Senfes. Boare for hearing, the Ape for taste, the Raven for fmelling, the Spider for Touch. God hath also given beafts inward senses, they can see objects, and distinguish between them by their Phancy, and they can remember them, but yet they have not right reason, what they do is in imitation, and have only shadows of Virtue; their building Nests, seeking food, prognosticating of weather, are effects of their inward senses, which the minutest animals have, as appeareth in the artificial contexture of the Spiders-Web, and in the Pismires storing against Winter; but in some Creatures these senses are more acute, in Fishes the Nerves are not so quick of Senie, they perceive little pain from any wound that is given them. No Creature can be without touch. The Mole hath no Sight, but it hath feeling. The Snail discovereth his way by His his fleshy Horns, and upon a dangerous obstacle draweth in her Horns. As to the sensitive and loco-motive faculties that are in beasts, they have them analogously as they are in man; the external Senses receive external objects, and so are carryed to the braine, there causing joy or griefe. Some creatures fly, Some swim, Some have a progressive motion, as Serpents and Worms, first by a contraction, and then by an extention of the body.

CHAP. III.

The Division of irrational Creatures.

Some Creatures are fanguineous, others are not. The former Kind are greater; forme creatures have two, some four feet, which makethe them more able to work. Other Creatures are aquatile, and bigger than Sanguine Creatures. In all kind of living creatures there is one, which is as it were King over the rest. Those that have no blood are called Exsanguineous, such are insects, which though they have not so perfect a heart, yet have something analogous to a heart.

3. Some Creatures are viviparons, and some ouiparous.

4. Some Creatures are more in Number, as Harts and Camels; some go singly, as Birds, that have have crooked talons, beasts that live upon prey, and Spiders, which feed upon Flies. Some creatures are domestique, as the Cow and Dog, and other creatures. It is the wonderful wisdome of God, that some shun the company of man, others love it; concerning which Fob speaketh, Cap. 39. Who hath set the wild Asse at liberty, or who hath loosed the bonds of the wild Asse; he derideth the multitude of the City, he heareth not the cry of the driver, he seeketh out the Mountaines for his pasture, and searcheth after every green thing. Will the Unicorn serve thee? &c.

s. Some creatures have more parts, some havefewer. But all creatures have various parts, because the Soul resideth not but in an organick body. All creatures consist of those parts that are necessary for their nutrition, or augmentation, thus they have that which is analogous to bones and nerves; the head is the seat of the Senses, wings for motion.

6. Some Creatures have feet, and they either have 2.4.8. or 10 feet, as Spiders. Those Creatures that have wings, have either two wings, or four wings, as certain insects: Fishes have neither feet nor wings, because that they live in a thicker Medium than other Creatures do.

7. Other Creatures are made to labour, as Horses, and Camels; other creatures God hath made only for food, as Hogs. Other creatures God hath made for both, as Oxen. Some for safety, as Dogs.

7. Some creatures are dumb, as most Fishes. Other creatures have a voice, or rather make a Noise, and especially at the time of their copulation, as appeareth by Frogs, which in the time of their coitus do croak and keep a great Noise in the waters; this may be seen plainly in Harts and Cats, if you observe them in the Winter time, but especially in Autumn. But this following table will comprehend in it all the Animals that have been mentioned before, or all that will be mentioned hereafter.

All Animals whatsoever, are either perfect or imperfect. Perfect creatures are either rationall or irrationall; irrationall are either those that live in the Air, or those that live in the Water, or those that live on the earth; or els there are some creatures which we call Amphibious, which are those creatures that live upon the earth partly, and partly in the waters. Imperfect creatures we call those which are partly Plants, and partly Animals, as Sponge. So is Sea-beares-breech, which is bred out of the earth, and are like to Herbs, yet if any one cometh but nigh it they have a kind of fear, and are presently contracted.

An Infect is such a creature whose head is contiguous, but not continuous to his body, as we may see in a Fly. So those that live both in the air, and in the Water, as are Frogs and Beavers; the rest are plain enough, from the very names of them.

Now although the preceding table doth sufficiently enough shew the order of our discourse, yet notwithstanding we will begin this History of Animals, and speak of the biggest Animals first. The consideration of which will make the other smaller kinds of Creatures more plain and eatie. And thus I have shewed the use of this knowledge, and that not only in Philosophy, which is very great, but also in Divinity. For from the nature of several beasts and birds, we may draw several profitable inferences and instructions, which may be useful to Divines, in the opening of several places of Scriptures, wherein several forts of creatures, not only Birds, but beasts and Fishes, which cannot be explained, unless we know the nature of those creatures that are there mentioned.

Now having finished the general table of all Animals, and shewed the design and Scope of this Treatise, together with the usefulness and benesit of it, we shall now proceed to speak of Creatures more particularly. And, as I said before, I shall begin the Book with the biggest Creatures first, so that the first Animal we shall speak to, shall be the Elephant, which is the business of the following Chapter; wherein we shall set down, not only the nature, bigness, food, &c. of the Elephant, but also the several places of Scripture wherein it is mentioned; and last of all, deduce those several Corrolaries, and instructions, that may be deduced from the nature of it.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Elephant.

He Elephant is a vast creature, but very deformed; she is also very prudent, strong, gentle and docile; we shall treat of this Creature suff of all, because Fob in his 40 th Chap: maketh this creature to be the beginning of the wayes of God, or the very first work of God: we may Judge of the greatness of this creature,

1. From his name; for Behema signifieth a Beatt: the Elephant in the fore-cited place is called Behemoth in the plural number, which is as much as to fay beasts, because he is in stead of many beafts.

2. From his tayl, of which the Scripture faith, in the fore-cited place, that it is like a Cedar, and yet it is of no use to him, but only to keep him from the Flyes.

3. From the quantity of his drink, for the Scripture saith that he drinketh up Rivers, i. e. he drinketh very much; for Arist. lib. 8. c. 9. of his History of Animals, saith that an Elephant at one feeding will drink up 9 Macedonian meafures; and in a dayes space he will drink thirty eight.

4. From his teeth, for he hath two teeth, which weigh 325, pound; and Julius Scaliger in his 204. Exercit: doth relate that he saw an Elephant's tooth longer then a man; his teeth are called ivory, of which in Africa and Athiopia are made posts, pales, hedges, and these for Hoggs; as Virgill hath it in the 3. Book of his Georg.

Inforibus pugnam Ex auro folidoque Elephante.

5. From his foot steps, the diameter of which was feen to be 3. hands and a thumb.

6. From his nose, for he hath a snowt which he maketh use of to take up his fodder, which he can extend 10. cubits in length: he loverh to be in waterish and fenny places; untill he is hindered from taking breath by some weeds, &c. that hang over his snowt; for by reason of the vastness of his body he cannot easily come out of the water; his height is judged to be 16. foot; that it doth delight in fenny places, 70b feemeth to intimate in his 40. Chap and 21.v. where he fayth, he lyeth under the thady trees, in the Covert of the reeds and fenns: although fome would understand this of the vastness of his body, which is so great that it cannot be covered by many trees; yet withall it shews that it doth delight to be in fenny places.

We may consider the strength of this Creature from thefe 6. particulars.

1. That Aristotle lib. 9th of the Hill. of Ani-

2. That Xtessus himself saw an Elephant pluck up a palme-tree by the roots, and when he had done he spurn'd it away with his feet.

3. Elian

3. Llian, lib. 13. layen that Liephants have tumbled down great walls; so that toward the East when the inhabitants go to warr they most come mouly get the victory by Elephants.

4. Job, Chap. 40. v. 18. fayth that his bones are like barrs of iron.

5. Maccab. 6. and 37. it is fayd that upon every Elephant were strong towers of wood wherein were 32. men belides the governour.

6. That he never fleepeth lying for if he should once lye down he could never get up again; but though this be so large and strong a creature, yet it is so ordered by the wonderful goodness of God, that it is a most milde and gentle Creature, for otherwise neither man nor beast could live for him; he is not only milde and gentle, but of all Creatures he is the mildest; and this will appear,

1. From the Holy Scripture, Fob 40. 10th, behold now Behemoth which eareth grafs like an Oxe, i.e. although it be so vast a Creature, yet it is so gentle that a man may rule it.

2. You may easily tame an Elephant after it is taken; as to the taking of Elephants there be divers wayes, whether they take them alive or dead. The Ethiopians when they have killed an Elephant they build a smal tent, and there they stay untill they have eaten it up. Those who would take them alive mark the paths that they are feen most commonly to go in, and there they die a pit so cunningly that the Elephant coming along her old path as she used to do, being not aware

3. In a little time these creatures are made so gentle that they will take out of ones hand like a little Dog, and will as it were embrace one with his fnout; fo then he will fuffer one to put ones head between his jawes, and will not thut his mouth they take the wilde ones.

untili you pull it out again.

4. He never layeth snares for any of his fellow creatures, but suffereth them to live quietly by him.

5. When whole flocks of little creatures meet the Elephant he will gently move out of the way, lest they should bruise themselves against him.

6. Philostratus fayth that he saw a boy of about 12. veeres of age who fate upon a great Elephant, and with a little flick guided it whither he wolud, to the admiration of the beholders.

7. He is not fed of flesh, neither doth he live by prey, but is content with green herbs, as the Scripture saith, he eateth grass like the Ox.

8. He is very much delighted with musick and finging.

o. He very much dreadeth any fnare that a man layeth for him, but most of all when she hath young ones; many times if he fee a man he will go aside as if he fled from him, left feeing such a huge creature he should be frighted; but if he doth but give him a nod he will falute him; fometimes he will go before, somerimes behind him, and will if need be sethim in the right way : But if once he knows that he intenderh to lay snares for him he destroyeth him; and when he hath so done he giveth the carcass to the next Elephant he meeteth that he may see his Enemy. Therefore they often meet together, and make a company, as Pliny fayth, lib. 8. Chap. 4. of his Natural History; the gent-leness, memory, and subtilty of this Creature is C 3

- The second second

fo great, that Arifiotic fayth, when he will learn to make all letters with his trunk, to dance, and to bend his knees; he will learn to do his reverence to the King, to cast a stone at a mark, to handle arms; and so King Porus (whom Alexander overcame) had an Elephane whom if his guide did command to kneel down would pretently fall on his knees.

He very well knoweth his name, and by dayly use he will understand the language of his country; and what soever he is commanded to do he taithfully doth it, never deceiving his guide: if an Elephant be to go to Sea, he will not enter into the ship, unless the master of the ship will swear he shall return again.

Plinus Mutianus, who was three times Conful at Rome, faw at Puteolis, that when an Elephant at sea was forced to be thrown over board, lest he should be frighted with the valtness of the Ocean, and the distance that he was from land, they used to make him go backwards, and so tumble him into the sea.

Plutarch also maketh mention of another Elephant, whose governour allowed him a whole meafure of corn every day; but he who gave it him alwayes took away half of his allowance; the governour coming one day himself gave him a whole measure of corn; the Elephant with his trunk parted it in half, and so discovered the fra do his feeder.

He tells us also of another, who was in love with a very beautiful woman of Alexandria, who going by

by her orought her fome apples, and with his trunk fawned upon her.

Athaneus tells us of an Elephant who did no hurt at all to a little childe that lay between his leggs.

Many like Examples we have in several Histories, in a certain Island in India called Zilana are found very large ones, and those who will learn the languages of strange countryes.

When Pompey was the 2d time Consul at Rome he brought severall Elephants into the publique Theater to fight with several Archers; but when the Elephants saw that they were hated by the people, they shewed themselves to be very much troubled, which they signifyed to the people by several gestures and lamentable cryes; at which the common people were so moved that they wept, and cursed Pompey for his cruelty. From what hath been sayd it plainly appears that there are shadows of virtue in Elephants; but this will yet surther appear by what followeth.

towards other Creatures that are but small, but also towards men which are wanding in holes, in caves, and also towards criminal persons, who use to be cast before them to be torn in pieces by them; which they will scarcely do unless they be drunk with wine; so King Bocchus being enraged against 30. men, commanded them to be bound to 30. Elephants; but the Elephants would not be bound to them, not being willing to be Executors of the Kings cruelty.

C 4 2. They

2. They never gorge themselves by eating too much; and if at any time they do eat more then they should do, they punish themselves afterwards by abstaining from meat for some dayes, that they may be ready to fight, or for any flight if occasion should be; which is a great Example of Temperance and providence.

2. They never couple with any strange Elephants, nor with their own very often, but only for generation-fake, and that not in the fight of other Elephants, but in private by themselves.

Neither doth he return to his fellowes before he be very well washed; and while the female is big the male doth not leave her, but is alwayes with her ready to defend her; she is said to carry her young two years, and to bring forth in the water, because she is very much asraid of the dragon. Others report of the Elephant, that she brings forth but once in her life, and then but one neither; which Scaliger, Exercitat. 204. Sect. I feems to deny, because (fayth he) there are seen many young ones to go by the fide of one Elephant.

4. They never leave their young ones but are alwayes with them, to defend them, and will lofe their life as foon as their young: when they go in companyes, the oldest goeth fore-most; when they are to go over the water, they carry their young ones in their snowt, some carry them in their teeth; those that are bigger follow them for the great ones can go over where the young ones cannot; all which are as it were shadowes of ove and gentleness,

5. They never pass by a dead Elephant unless they can find a bough or a clod of Earth to cover them with, by which they shew a great deal of piety in burying them.

6. They carefully cure those who are fick or wounded, they provide them meat and cherish and help them in all their dangers, and if they fee the Huntsman they run upon him, and fright him away. When Hannibal could not make the Elephants go over the River, he used this stratagem. He commanded that one of them should be wounded in his ear and to be thrown into the River, and as foon as the wounded Elephant was in, all the rest followed her.

The wounded Elephant when he is hunted seeks for Aloes, but before he useth it, he will lift up his head, and use certain other gestures, which is (as their Governours fay) an imploring Heaven, and as it were an imitation of Religion.

Others will falute the New-Moon, and at that time many of them will get together, and with delight and reverence, as they can, do behold it.

7. They have a defire after praise, for it was observed that one of them, who was of a more dull capacity, was often corrected, and had but a bad esteem amongst them. When they are commanded to do homage, as it were to the Moon, and are not able to do it, they will firive with them-felves untill they can do it. Hence we may learn good instructions, as to obedience, and to diligence in our studies.

When they are overcome by any of their fellows, they are very much ashamed of it, and cannot endure their presence, nay, not so much as to hear them; hence we may learn honest zmulation: for it is commonly said, that he who yields to any one, will be no body.

8. They cannot fwim, yet they delight to be in Ships, whence Erasmus borroweth this similitude; as the Elephants who by reason of the greatness of their bodies cannot swim, yet they love to be in Ships, so many who are unlearned, yet love to be in the company of those that are learned. Whence we may learn not to cast away or despise the Arts, because we are ignorant of them our selves; but we should love and admire them in others, lest the old saying be verified in us, viz. That learning bath no enemy but the ignorant

9. They are said to want Gall, or at least they have very little, as appears from Maccab. 6.34. to provoke them to fight they shewed them the juice of grapes, and Mulberryes, which in the beginning of a fight doth very much enrage and provoke them, in somuch that (as Ofinius relates) they did not only carry wooden Towers on their backs, full of men, but they also took swords in their Teeth, with which they did good execution. But this rage (as the same Ofonius relates) doth not last long, for they being impatient of any pain, if the Enemy do but wound her on the side, she will be so enraged, that she will rush through the Army, and by that means will so disorder it, that it cannot be put in order again; Neither can any man The make her tame again.

The long lives of the Elephants is very wonderfull; some say it liveth 200 years, others 300. when Alexander the Great had conquered one Phorus, King of India, he took a great Elephant, which had fought very valiantly for his King, and named him Ajax, and dedicated him to the Sun, and let him go with this inscription, Alexander the Son of Jupiter hath dedicated Ajax to the Sun. This Elephant was found with the same inscription 350 years after, but many of them do not live to that age, for they are often seek of very dangerous diseases.

in this Creature; and though they are many, yet we shall speak of some of the most observable.

They cannot endure the grunting of Hoggs, an example of which we have in the Wars of the Magarens; for when Antipater brought a great many Elephants loaded with armed men, against whom the Enemy brought a great Company of Hoggs in the middle of them, after the Hoggs had been pretry well beaten, they began to fall a grunting; the Elephants, as soon as they heard them, ran all away. We may hence see the reason, why wise men are moved with calumny and reproaches.

2 There is a great Antipathy between Elephants and Dragons, although Elephants do exceed them not only in the greatness of their body, but also in strength, yet oftentimes the Dragon doth overcome and ensure him, sometimes by lurking in pathes in which he useth to go, sometimes by getting on the top of that against which he leaneth at night; and because Elephants alwayes go through woods woods in Companies, the Dragon lets on the last; the first thing a Dragon doth, when he takes an Elephant, is to entangle his feet in a knot; after that the first part he woulds is his Ear, which he wounds untill the bload spout out, for the Dragen being a very hot Greature drinks the bloud of Elephants, which he knows is cold, and that is the reason the Dragon drinks so much of it in the Summer time. After they have killed the Elephant by facking his bloud, they never touch the body: the Dragon will drink nimielf drunk with his bloud, and they will drink untill they burft themselves, so that the Conqueror and Conquered dye both together; hence Erasmus doth inferr the uncertain chances of Warr, for oftendimes both partyes perish; and we may also compare it (faith he) to Christ and Saten combating together, and also to the Tyranny of wicked men to Christians; for as Dragons do thirst for the blood of Elephants most in the Summer-time, which they get by fraud and craft, fo Tyrants do chiefly delire the bload of good men, when Asted by their passion; and as Drago is oftentimes do perish together with the Elepaants, fo Tyrants themselves oft-times undergo grievous punishments; there are many famous examples to this purpose to be brought out of Eusebius, concerning Dimitian, Meximianus, Maventius, and Miximinus, whose cruelty was so great, that in one Moneth were flain 7000 by their command, but they all underwent great and Tragicall punish-ments; Dometian killed himself, Maximianus was marthered, Maxentins was overcome in warr, and and he together with his fouldiess were driven into a River, and were drowned; and Maximinus was eatenup of Worms.

The Story of fulian is known to all almost, who walking alone by himself in a solitary place, was on a sudden wounded with a Weapon which he had about him; he taking some of the bloud in his hand, and holding it up toward Heaven, sayd, Thom hast overcome me, O thou Galilean; so that it was truly said of the Poet.

Ad generum Casaris sine cade & sanguine Paali Descendunt Reges & sicca morte Tyranni.

3. There is a wonderful Antipathy betwixt an Elephant and a Ram, which when he seeth he is much terrified, and he is even mad, yet at the fight of a Goat he groweth tame. So the Ro-mans used to make the Hephants of the King of Epirus to run'away by bringing Rams to them. this may teach us allegorically, that learning like the Goat doth tame the fiercenels of barbarous people; whence it was well faid, that he who hath well learned the Arrs, it doth better his manners. Thus the wind did obey Christ's command, as we may read in the Evangelical story; so the Fews, when our Saviour faid thefe words, I am he, fell back; so the Heathers left all their Oracles, Idols, and Divinations, when once the Gospel of Christ was made known to them. Thus sinners when once they received the impressions of the Holy pirit they grew more milde and civil.

4. The Elephant is faid extremely to hate a Monse, infomuch that if the Monse touch any thing that is in his Manger, he will not eat any of it. fo that a small Enemy may torment an Heroick mind.

5. So if a Swallow be thrown into the water where an Elephant drinks, he will turn from it.

6. Octentimes the Elephant and Chamelion are fed together on a green bough; the Elephant often eareth wild-Olives, for he cannot live without them.

7. The Elephant doth not love the light of fire, neither can it endure the light of Grapes or Mulberries, and the reaton of it is, because a red colour moveth the spirits, which are conveyed through the blood; for if the blood be once moved, the whole body is disturbed, hence those that have red garments can never carch them. The Indian Elephant is nine Cubits high, and five broad; fometimes she will tear an Arm of a Tree off, which twenty five men pulling with a rope cannot bend it to the ground; when other food fails, he liveth on roots which he diggeth out of the grafs.

CHAP. V.

Of the Camel.

Camel is a very large Creature, of a tall A stature, and hath a hard skin, a small head, of a brown colour, very chafte, and an Enemy to I. The Horles.

1. The Scripture too feems to intimate to us, how great it is, Matth. 23. 24 speaking of those who more regarded the commandements of men than of God, faith they strain at a Gnat, and swallow a Camel, fignifying those who strain their drink, lest they should drink a Flye, and in the mean while swallow a Camel

2. It hath a very thick skin, i. e. as Aristotle faith in his second book of the History of Animals, Chap. 2. of all four-footed beafts he hath only that which we call a Bunch; in Esai. 30. 6. He is said to sit upon the bunch of Camels. There are found several of them in Arabia and Asia; those in Arabia have two bunches, those are called Dromedaries.

3. These Creatures are made fit to carry burthens in War; and that they may go the faster, they fometimes are gelded, for one Camel that is ftrong will carry a thousand pound weight; they commonly will carry feven hundred.

4. In old age, or in any disease his strength doth very much decay, but then he will carry a hundred pound. Hence the proverb, that an old Camel will carry the burthens of many Affes, i.e. That a Vertuous man in old age or lickness doth excel many a young man who is in health. When he is to be loaded he will kneel down if you do but touch him on his knees with your hand; when they kneel they bend their foremost hams; they will not take more than their ordinary burthen, or more than their strength will bear.

5° Camels are a most swift Creature, by reason of the largeness of their steps; those Camels which are small; and cannot carry any burthen, yet they will go twenty five German miles in a

6. They will not go beyond their usual Stages, and if once tyred in a Journey, he will not ilir (though you lay on never so many stripes) unless he hear some musick.

7. They are of a very hot temper, and therefore of a very lean and spare body. And by reafon they are hot they have a very good concoction, which is the reason why their Milk is so wholesom for man.

8. They cannot endure Cold.

9. They never over-burthen themselves with meat, but are content with a little.

10. They never drink in clear water, but first they make it muddy with their feet, as do also the Elephants, &c.

11. They can endure thirst for four dayes together, but if forced to it, for fifteen dayes. There are Camels found in Lybia which feed upon grafs, and if it be wet with dew, they never drink.

12. Camels have many ventricles, and not without cause, for they loving thorny meat, and that which is very hard of digestion, it would never be fo well unless they had more ventricles than one, yet they have teeth but on one side, because they have so many ventricles, which will digett their meat without so much chewing,

13. They do not couple openly, but in some private place, and in that place where they couple,

there

there the Male and Female alwayes meet afterwards. In the time of their Coupling they are very fierce, infomuch that they will endure no one to come nigh them, unless it be the Keeper himself and that very scarcely neither.

Copulation; the young one never goeth along with his Dam, although you would force him to it. Aristotle giveth us an example of this, of a certain Camel that was by his Keeper brought to his Dam to cover her, who lay hid being covered with straw, the Camel leaps on her; some of her covering falling off, he knew her, at which he being enraged, he leapt upon his Keeper, and tore him in pieces.

15. They have no Horns, nor teeth in both

Jaws.

16. Their feet are fleshy like Geese, therefore it is that oftentimes they make small puddles to wash their feet in.

Manginess, and sometimes they have the Gowt, which oftentimes kills them.

18. They are faid to have no gall, which must be thus understood; not as if they had no choler at all, but they have a cholerick humour which runs through their veins, which is the reason that they are so patient, which would not be were their choler in one place.

difficult to bring them to it; whence the Proverb man is as fit for such a business, as a Camel is to leap. Julius Cafar Scaliger tells us how to make a Camei leap; thus, let a young one be shut up in a hot house, which is more than ordinarily heated, and at the doors let some little bells be rung, the Camel being very much enraged with the heat, will begin a little to list up his seet, and afterward more and more, so that when she cometh out again, whensoever she hears bells she will leap.

20. They fay that there is a mutual love between Camels, for when they are in Company, or in a Stable together, if one of them chance to be fick, the rest of the Camels will leave their meat, and by several gestures will declare a sympathy with him.

21. Camels are exceedingly hated by Horses, a notable instance of which Herodotus hath in his first Book of the War between Cyrus and Crass. Crasus bringing an excellent Troop of Horse into the field, Cyrus used this stratagem, he brings a company of Camels, and sets them in sight of the Horses, who being not able to endure their sight or smell, immediately sed away.

22. In the East they are fed among other Cattle, and Historians tell us that several Camels have been roasted whole, being stuff'd within with other small Creatures, as in our dayes Oxen are roafted whole on some grand festivals.

Thus having explained the several properties of Camels, it now remains that we shew the several Allegories. 2. Why a Camel is said to be unclean, the Jems being forbid to eat it, Levit. 11.

3. How it is that John Baptist was said to have his garments of Camels hair.

1. For

1. For the several Allegooies.

1. A Camel is a deformed Creature, and Nature hath so formed her, as if she were Created o 11 purpose to carry burthens. So the Ministers of the Gospel are despised and slighted; for Christ hath not chosen the wise and strong, but the weak, who are compelled oftentimes to carry great burthens of affliction.

2. As there is a natural enmity between a Horse and a Camel (yet so that the Horses shun the Camels) so it is very rare to see the great men of this World to agree one with another, who carry themselves so high in their deportment, the Ministers carrying themselves humbly to them, yet at last those great ones are forced to yield to them.

3. As Camels Milk is the best and sweetest, so the Doctrine of the Gospel concerning peace with God, and remission of sins, is most sweet and pleafant, bringing comfort to the disconsolate, and relief in the greatest misery.

4. As there is a mutual love between Camels, especially towards the sick, so there ought to be a great care taken by Ministers to keep and preferve peace and unity amongst men.

5. As Camels are chalte and continent, so ought all men, but more especially the Ministers of the Gofpel.

6. As Camels are content with a little meat, and can long endure thirst, so Ministers ought to be very moderate in the use of these outward things, not guilty of Covetousness, not Usurers. D 2 16.18

nor

not guilty of filthy lucre, for they should know that in this life they must have the water of tears, and the bread of affliction.

7. As Camels fall on their knees when they take their burthens, fo the Ministers ought patiently to take their burthens, and undergo the difficulties that may attend their Office.

8. As Camels will not go beyond their Stage, nor will they take more than they can, fo Ministers should do the like, not to cover anothers place and neglect their own. Whence, in the Fable, the Camel desiring Horns from Jupiter, he took from him his Ears: i.e. She defired more, when she did not make use of what she had.

9. As Camels have many ventricles for the better concoction of what they eat, so Ministers ought to meditate again and again, and diligently to correct those things which they intend to preach, and not to speak what comes next.

10. As Camels have not all their gall in one place, but it runs through their veins, fo Ministers ought not easily to be provoked to anger.

2. We come now to speak of that place, Lewit. 11. 4. in which the Jews were forbid to eat the Camel, because it cheweth the Cud, but did not divide the hoof, therefore it was unclean. The reason of which is this, the flesh of a Camel is not unclean or noxious of it self, nor is it said it shall be un clean to all, but only to the Jews. So again , if they touched any thing that was unclean, they were to remain unclean untill the Evening, but not not for ever, therefore we fee that all things are good with respect to the time and place; so that by these prohibited mests God would fignific unto us, that chewing the Cud is an Emblem of purity, and dividing the Hoof an Emblem of modesty, for those Creatures which chew the Cud are fed with purer meat than those which do not; and those Creatures which part the Hoof are not io fierce as those which do not. That which the Jews were to learn from those Creatures which chew'd the Cud, and divided the Hoof, was this, that they ought diligently to meditate and confider of those divine truths which at any time they heard, and from the gentleness of those Creatures to learn mildness and courteousness towards all: Luther in the beginning of his book of directions for reading of the Fathers wuserh this metaphor; that those Fathers only are to be chose which savour of the spirit. So Lastantins followeth the metaphor well, in his fourth Book, Chap. 18. Concerning the prohibition of eating Hogs flesh.

So God had respect to this in all their facrifices, as Galatinus in his history of the Jens, lib. 11. Chap. 9. faith, that those Creatures which were facrificed did figuratively significant them several Vices, and the mortification of those Vices, and partly Vertues; so the sirflings of the Sheep which Abel offered up to God, and the Paschal Lamb signified the suffering of the Messas. So Kids and Goats signified unto them the mortification of the sins of the sless by repentance, as also the impurity and the filthiness of every sinner.

3 By

By the Bull was signified pride, by the Calf wantonness, by the Goat and Sparrow unconstancy. Contrarily, by the Sheep was signified gentleness, by the Lamb innocency, by the Ox sury, by the Turtle-Dove Chastity, by Pigeons which saye in Companies, and have no Gall, is signified Charity; thus Galatinus.

3. Concerning the Garment of John the Baptist, which St. Marth. saith was made of Camels hair, whence ariseth two enquiries. 1. as to the Matter, and 2. as to the Form of it.

1. As to the Matter of it, we must know that the word which we translate a Camel, signifies in Greek, a Cable-Rope, therefore

1. Some think that his Garment was made of Camels hair, as our hair Cloath is made of Goats hair; which Garment was formerly a fign of Repentance, and did fuit with him who was a preacher of Repentance. Philip was of the opinion that John Baptifts Garments were made partly of Camels hair, and partly of Flax; as amongft us, we have some stuffs which are half silk, which the Jews were not to wear, as appears, Dent. 22. 11. So that in this respect also that kind of Garment did very welf suit with him who was to preach the abolishing of the Law, and the Conversion of Jews and Gentiles to one Lord, and also to signific that the Priest-hood of the New Testament did not consist in Garments.

Some think that it was woven with thick flax, like to our Cotton, therefore the Monks of the Order of St. John imitate him to this day, by fuch

fuch a Garment; but I am apt to believe that it was made only of Camels hair.

2. Concerning the fashion of it, some do enquire what the reason is that Elias (whom Fohn mentioneth) is faid to be a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loyns, 2 King. 1. 8. which was the better to defend him from the extremity of the weather, he being a man that was often in the open Air, and in the Wilderness; and therefore John the Baptist would have his Garment like the Garment of Elias; and therefore Limners now adayes do not well in representing John wrapt in a Camels skin, which makes him look more like a Satyr than a Man. So Heb. 11. 37. we read that the Christians wandred up and down in Sheep-skins, and Goet-skins, the benefit of which was only to keep them from cold, as we see in the example of Elias.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Lyon.

He Lyon is a fierce and intractable Creature, but yet famous, because it hath the shadows of many Vertues, which we may learn partly from the propertyes of his body, and of his foul. Those which belong to his body are these.

It. His bones are so firm and solid that they are scarcely perceived to have any cavity in them, and yet they are but very small; and therefore it is that his Neck is fo stiff and hard, that many have thought that it had no joynts, but was one contimed bone.

: yes

2. The strength of a Lyon is so great, that he can at once break all the bones of a mans body; therefore it is that we find in holy writ, What is Stronger than a Lyon? Judg. 14. 18. And fo Solomon saith, that a Lyon is the strongest of Creatures, Pro. 30. 30. Hence comes the proverb, as good vex a Lyon. Thus Gen. 49. v. 9. 'tis said, Judah is a Lyons Whelp, he stooped down he conched as a Lyon, and as an old Lyon; by which is lignified to us the great strength of the Jews, who although they have oftentimes been worited, yet there have been some branches lest of them even untill Christs time. So Numb. 24. 9. he concludes; he lay dema as a Lyon, and as a great Lyon, who (hall stir him up?-

3. As the Lyon is the King, so it is the hotters of all Creatures, and therefore he foon digesteh his prey; he is also a greedy and devouring Creature, and oftentimes eats his prey without chewing, which he vomiting up eats it again.

4. By reason of his great heat he breeds much choler, and therefore in the Summer time he is continually troubled with a quartane feaver.

5. Sometimes having eaten too much, he is forced to abstain from meat for two or three dayes, and afterwards for some time to eat but once every other day; which afterwards makes him follow the prey with more greediness.

6. His

6. His dung is very dry and hard, so that he easeth nature with a great deal of difficulty. He makes his water as a Dog doth, with one leg lift up, which comes from him with a great deal of difficulty.

7. He hath short eye-lids, but yet very great eyes; and that is the reason that he is so troubled with the Gnats which slye in his eyes, that he is forced sometimes to plunge himself in the water when he fleeps.

8. When he sleeps, he sleeps with his eyes open, which is but very little; he is often seen to move his tayl when he is asleep, that men may see that they are not fast asleep.

9. Some Lyons have Manes, and those are the fiercest; and therefore those in America are very fearful and timerous, so that they cannot endure the fight of man.

2. We come now to speak of the properties which are in the foul of a Lyon.

r. A Lyon is a generous, proud, cruel, hasty Creature; and as Horses shew their anger by hair, so do Lyons by their tayl, which they strike against the ground when at any time they are angred; but when their passion is a little over, they strike their own backs with it.

2. They hurt no man, and are feldom angry, except they are forced to it by great hunger, or have been hurt first; they seldom pursue or hurt man or child, unless it be in their old age, when they are not able to encounter with wilde beasts for a prey; and therefore it is that when they are old, they are seen to wander up and down in Cities for a prey; Julius Camillus, a French man, tells us this story of himself; a certain Lyon did pursue him, but coming to him did him no mischief at all; the reason whereof he makes to be this; because the Lyon is one of the twelve signs of the Zodiack; which I do not at all approve of.

3. The Lyon never makes a prey of those who lye flat on their faces, and feem as if they were dead. I have read of one who putting his hand in a Lyons mouth, got hold of his tongue and killed him; it is strange, that although he can break Iron, yet he never meddles with wood, it being the weaker of the two; and therefore it is, that they are alwayes kept up in wooden Dens. 4. They are oftentimes feen to hide themselves in the fields, lest Passengers should be frighted at them.

5. When they are hunted, they do not make much hafte from the Hunfmen; and although they pursue him over hedge and ditch, yet he will not flye, but goes on flowly before, and oftentimes stands still in the light of the Hunters, as it were preparing himself to encounter with them; and when he comes to a great hedge, he then runs swiftly away, that he may get sight of the Hunters again, that so they might not think he hid himself for fear; so that the Lyon is without any malicious craft or guile. Neither are they ever feen to look afquint on any one; and as they will not flye from the hunter, so they will not willingly run themselves into a snare: and therefore it is, that when they go, they cover their foot-steps with their tayl, left huntimen should follow them by their foot-steps. 7. When at any time they are put to slight, they do strive all they can to vomit; and do provoke themselves to vomit by putting their claw into their throat, that thereby emptying themselves they may be the lighter to run. This they do also, if they find at any time, that they have overcharged their stomacks. 8. The Lyoness, when she hath young ones, will fight so fiercely to defend them, that she will lose her life before they shall be taken from her. Elian relateth a story of a Bear in a Mountain of Thracia, who going into a Lyons Den, the Dam being gone out to look for a prey, found feveral young ones in the Den, no one being there, he destroyeth them all; the Lyon and Lyoness return d and took him in the very act; he for fear climbeth up into a high Tree, thinking there he was fafe; the Lyon he runneth out into the wood (the Lyoness in the mean time standing at the Tree where the Bear was) and wandring up and down; found a man with a Hatchet in his armes, whom he forced to go along with him, taking hold of his cloaths, and led him to the Tree where the Bear was, and there he made some signs to him, that he should cut it down; which when he had done, the Lyon foon destroyed the Bear; which being done, he carried the man into his way again. 9. In a great multitude the Lyon diligently observeth who it is that woundeth him, and taketh him alone from all the red of the company, and teareth him in pieces : those hose who have weapons and do not hurt him, he will do them no hurt, but only affright and terrify them.

1. Although, by what hath been said, we may gather the gratitude of the Lyon; yet it will further appear by the example of a Lyon at Rome, who would not touch Androdus's servant, because that not long before he had pulled a thorn out of his foot; neither do they alwayes exercise their power on every object.

2. There are lix wayes whereby to make these Creatures milde and gentle.

1. The first way is to hood-wink them; Pliny recites many examples to this purpose, which happened at Rome.

2. To give them meat, so as to fill their bellies; for Arift. (lib. 9. of the History of Animals, cha. 44) faith that when they are full and satisfied, they are very tame, tradable, and gentle.

3. When they are kept in a House; whence Antonius did make them so tame and gentle by this means, that his Chariot sometimes was drawn by Lyons; and Hanno also, the Carthaginian, did by this means so tame them, that they did carry burthens like Asses; and which is more, Antonius Caracalla had some Lyons which he brought up in the house, which were so gentle that they would lick his mouth, and at dinner time used to sit on a bench by him, and to lye in the bed with him like little dogs.

4. When they are kindly used, or have received any benefit, as appears from the fore-cited story of

Androdus

A Description of living Creatures. 45.
Androdus; also their Keeper may lead, nay, ftrike them, and they will do them no harm.

5. If any one lyeth flat on his face, and doth feign as if he were dead.

6. If their mouths are miraculously shut, as in the case of Daniel, Chap. 9.

ti. They will never injure a Camel, if they can have any other prey; hence Herodotas recites that Xerxes did look on it as a prodigy, and as a token of bad fuccess in his war, when a Lyon in his Army tore a Camel in pieces.

12. They alwayes hide themselves in some Cave, or high Mountain, in which they most delight to be, and there they will fit in fuch a posture as may the better fit them with greater violence to fet on the next prey. Hence David, Pfal. 10. v. 8, 9. doth recite all the several postures of Lyons, and doth apply them to his Enemies. But if the prey be so far from him, that he thinks he will escape, he will roar and make such a noise, that he will even amaze the wild beafts, so that they are not able to stir any further, and so become a prey; hence it is that the Scripture, when at any time it speaketh of an Enemy, to shew the terribleness of him, setteth it out by the roaring of a Lyon. 14. When he cometh to a wild beaft, he encompasseth him with his tayl, so that he cannot get out: after once he hath taken his prey, he teareth it to pieces with his teeth and claws; and after that he hath broken all the bones, and torn the flesh in pieces, he then first licketh up the blood, before he eateth any of the flesh. 16. If he

he espyeth an enemy approaching, he immediately leaveth his prey, and purfueth his Enemy; and if he seeth that he flyeth from him, he pursueth no further; but if he will not run away from him, and if he standerh to him, he presently destroyeth him, and then returneth to his prey again. 17. He alwayes leaveth some of his prey for other beatts, 18. Whatever Creature the Lyon woundeth, the blood of it turneth black, yet the fat of a Lion is good against a bite of any other Creature. There is a kind of secret Antipathy in other Creatures against the fat of a Lyon. 19. He can contract his nails and hide them as it were in his flesh; which he doth many times, left they should grow dull in cold weather. 20, The Lyon never feedeth with the Lyonofs, nor with any other Creature, but alwayes feedeth in folitary places, and defarts. 21. As the Lyones is very fierce, so she is also very leacherous; she will mingle her self with other Lyons, also with the Libard and Civer. 22. In those places where there are many Lyons, if any of them are taken, the rest presently run away. 23. They cannot be taken but in pit-falls, wherein a Lamb or two must be put, and then they eafily run in for them. There are several things which the Lyon hateth, and cannot endure: 1. A Lyon cannot endure the noise of wheels. 2. He cannot endure a Cocks-comb, he is very much affrighted at the light of it. 3. A Lyon is very much afraid of fire. 4. He is as great an enemy to the crowing of a Cock. 5. They are eafily afrighted with the light of any that looketh like a

A Description of living Creatures. 47 Chost, or any wayes terrible to look upon; but above all creatures they hate an Ape most, which is a crafty cunning Creature, which a Lyon hath very little of; yet when a Lyon is fick, nothing will cure him fo foon as the blood of an Ape. 7. A Lyon cannot endure to see a Wolf. Philip Camerarins telleth us that a Lyon hath no fuch hatred against a Cock, for they have been oftentimes feen to have taken both Cocks and Hens, and tear them in pieces; we have several names in Scripture, by which Lyons are called, which are especially four. 1. They are called Whelps, that is, those young Lyons that are not yet able to feek their prey : but although a Lyon is so fierce, notwithstanding the divine providence hath put such an affection into will bring them food into the Den, until they are able to go out to take their prey. 2. They are called Kephir in the Hebren, which fignifieth those Lyons that are not yet come to full age, but are of middle age, at which time they are most ravenous and greedy of their prey. The Psalmist compareth the covetous to Lyons whelps, being violent and greedy Creatures. 3. They are called Ari, which is when they are at the strongest that they which is when they are at the strongest that they will be; it cometh from an Hebrew word, Arah, which fignifieth to fnatch, and devour, because at that age they are aprest to tear and devour: we find that Tyrannical Rulers are set out in Scripture by Lyons. These Lyons when they grow old are called Levi, because then they are not able to go out to seek their prey, but hide themselves in Dens, and behind bushes, and lye as if they were asleep, and move no part of their body; fo when any beast passeth by, he serteth upon him on a sudden, and teareth him in pieces; just as Cats catch Birds and Mice; but if they are so old, that they cannot get their prey, they fometimes do fall upon men and destroy them. But it is ordained so by divine providence, that their young ones bring them meat when they are not able to go for it themselves. A Lyon liveth to a great age, for feveral of their teeth have been very much eaten in, which sheweth that they were very old.

3. Although the Lyon is of a noble and generous spirit, yet sometimes also he is very fierce and cruel; from whence we may learn feveral good instructions; and first we will consider what the Scripture speaks, as when the Fews, Christ, the Apostles, and all wise men are called Lyons; hence Gen. 49. 9. Kings are called Lyons, whom no one dare raise; and as the bones of a Lyon are firm and strong, so the Fewish state was so firmly established that although it had many enemies, yet they could never overthrow it. Moreover though the Lyon is a strong Creature, yet is he not proud of his strength, neither hath he any craft or guile, but doth all his actions openly; so in the Femish state right and Justice ought to prevail before fraud and injustice; and as the Lyon is a great Enemy to the Wolf; fo all Common-wealths ought to be armed. with strength and power against all fedition and heresie; so David, Psal. 101. 7. He that work-eth deceit shall not dwell within my house, and he that

A Description of living Creatures. 49 that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight. And though a Lyon be sometimes very sierce, yet he is then so noble and generous, that he will spare those who crouch to him; so it is policy in Princes to be ready to forgive, according to that of Virgil,

Parcere subjectis, & debellare superbos, to spare the humble, and to bring down the proud; and as Lyons sleep but very little, so all Rulers ought to be vigilant and watchful, as Homer seems

έ χρη παννύχιον εύδειν Κεχρήμενον ανδρά, i. e. It is not fit for a Governour to fleep much; and therefore it is that the Ancients have given a Lyon in the Arms of Princes, to shew that they ought to be pitiful and merciful towards their subjects; yet also just and impartial to all malefactors and offenders; therefore Solomon compareth the wrath of a King to the roaring of a Lyon, Pro. 20. 2. The wrath of a King is as the roaring of a Lyon, whoso provoketh him to anger sinneth against his own soul; and we find it prophesied by foel, chap. 2. 10, concerning God, That he shall utter his voice as a Lyon; thus Christ is called the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah, Rev. 5. 5. so the Tribe of Judah is called a Lyon, and a Lyons whelp, Gen. 49. 9. So called because it was such a settled and strong Government, which continued even untill Christs time, and was then the most famous Government in the whole World; and although they had several Kings and Judges, famous for power and wifdom, yet Christ by way of eminency is called the 1.7013 Lyon of them all; which is plain, as we might shew in several particulars; as his satisfaction for our fins, his conquering the Devil, and his feveral And as the Lyon, when he roars, doth make the other beafts to quake and tremble; fo Christ by his word hath converted several Nations to himself, Mic. 5. 8. we read that the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people, as a Lyon amongst the beasts of the Forest, as a young Lyon among the slocks of Sheep, who if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Thus Christ brought the Jews from the Babylonish Captivity: fo holy men are compared to Lyons, for as Lyons do prepare themselves to take their prey by fetting them in a convenient place, by watching, &c. fo the Apostles were made all things to all men, that they might gain some.

2. As Lyons by their roaring do affright their prey, that they may make it stand still astonished; so the Ministers not by force of Arms, but by the word of God, ought to bring men to Repentance.

3. As Lyons will not suffer their prey to be taken from them, so the Apostles gave all diligence by visiting the Churches which they had planted, lest they should be drawn aside by Satan, the common Enemy.

4. Again, we find just men compared to Lyons, Pro. 28. I. The Righteons are as hold as a Lyon. For first, as a Lyon is a strong and hold Creature, scorning none of his fellow Creatures, so the true Church, i. e. all holy and pious men are armed with with the spiritual strength of the Lyon of the tribe of Judah, by which they can overcome and conquer all those dangers and difficulties which do attend them in this World.

5. As the Lyon, if he finds himself sleepy, doth lye down and sleep, let it be where it will; Thus the righteons are prepared to undergo all dangers, let them happen in what place soever, according to the old verse, Omne solum forti patria est, seu piscibus aquor; A valiant man is never out of his Countrey.

Moreover, as Lyons have nothing of craft or deceit, nor will they look afquint on any one, neither will they hide themselves when hunted; so holy and pious men are plain and open in all their dealings.

And as Lyons do hate Apes and Wolves, so true Christians are Enemies to all Tyrants and distemblers; Pindar compares a wise man to a Lyon, being ready to bear all burthens and hard-ships that shall be laid upon him; but he is also like a Fox, taking counsel in all his actions; thus we have shewn what good we may learn from this Creature; and we will consider what we may learn from those e-vil qualities which are in him.

We find in holy Scriptures, that all Tyrants, Hypocrites, and the Devil himself is compared to a Lyon; and we find also, Dan. 7. 4. that the Assyrian, Chaldean, and Babylonish Monarchies are compared to a Lyon, and an Eagle, which might be for these reasons.

1. Because as a Lyon is a strong and fierce Creature, so most of the Kings of the above-named E 2 Monarchies,

52 The history of Brutes; or,

Monarchies, were both potent and cruel, as Nimroth, Salmanasser, Sennacherib, Nebuchodonosor, Xerxes, &c.

2. As the Lyon is the chiefest of Creatures, so the Assyrian King had vast Dominions and territories, of which we may read at large in holy writ.

3. As the Lyoness is a most leacherous Creature, so the Chaldeans and most of their Kings were Subject to lust and gluttony; so we find Sardanapa-lus, who by his lust did lose his Kingdom; we read, Psal. 22, 14. that Christ complaineth, that his Enemies are like Lyons; and in another place, he calls them Lyons, the Priests Bulls, and the Scribes Dogs; as also Pro. 26. 15. As a roaring Lyon, and a hungry Bear, so is a wicked Prince over the people. For as a hungry Lyon spares none, fo wicked Princes are cruel towards the innocent, devouring the Sheep. Aristotle calls Tyrants Lyons, but more cowardly Princes he compares to Hares; so the fable of the Hares speaking to the Lyons, who could scarcely speak for fear of being devoured by them: it may fitly be applyed to those timerous men who dare not reprove great Potentates.

Moreover we read, Eccles. 4. 35. where it is said, be not thou as a Lyon in the house, by which all Governours of Families are taught to be mild and gentle towards their Families, and never to disturb that conjugal love and society which ought to be between Man and Wife, which we are taught by the Lyon, who is never angry with the Lyoness; and as the Devil, so all wicked men who are his instruments, are compared to Lyons; for although the Jews in the Gospel called Satan Beelzebub, which signifies the Prince of lies, which they spoke out of disgrace, yet the Apostle Peter compares him more fitly to a rearing Lyon, going about feeking whom he may devour: for though the Lyon can go three dayes together without any sustenance, yet afterwards it makes him follow his prey with more eagerness and sierceness.

And as the Lyon is fierce and cruel when he hath got a prey, and in the pursuit of it covers his footsteps with his tayl, lest the Huntsmen should follow him by his steps; so the Devil is cunning and diligent to take all occasions to get men into his snare, which he doth sometimes by drunkenness, or some other sin.

Further, as the Lyon doth not eat one part of his prey only, but devours it all; so the Devil doth destroy both body and soul; and as Lyons are fiercest when old, wandring near Cities making a prey of Men, so the Devil in these last times is most diligent and watchful to seduce the souls of men: and as a Lyon doth not break wood (though it be weakest) but Iron; so the Devil sets on those that are most secure; therefore let him that stands take heed lest he fall. And as a Lyon cannot endure the crowing of a Cock, so the Devil is only by the sound of the Gospel overcome, not by external means.

Finally, as the Cock is a weak Creature, yet is proud of his crowing; so the Saints, though weak and feeble in themselves, yet do make their boats, and do conside in the promises of Christ;

54. The History of Brutes; or, we have to this purpose the Examples of the Martyrs, who were cast to Lyons, yet were not at all amazed; and those several fables of the Lyons are not to be made light of, for from them we may learn good Morals.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Bear.

He word Bear, is derived from the latin word Urgeo, which fignifies to urge or provoke. It is a very large Creature, and very strong; mischievous, perfidious, and deformed, and a great lover of Honey: we shall speak to the properties of this Creature more particularly.

1. Although, as we said, it is so fierce, yet it is not so strong as a Lyon, nevertheless it can break a mans back-bone afunder at once.

2. Though it hath such a strong body, yet it hath a very weak head, and therefore it is when he comes down from a Tree, he comes down backwards, but if he be forced to leap down, he takes great care to defend his head with his fore-feet. Pliny tells us that there have been several Bears found dead in the Sand at Rome, which were supposed to have had some blow on the head, which killed them.

3. When the Male and Female meet together for Copulation, afterwards they go backwards, and never see one another again, but hide them-selves in some Cave or Den, and therefore it is very rare to find a Bear who is big with young; there is a time in the Winter quarter when they sleep for several dayes together, and that so soundly, that it is a difficult thing to awake them; and this is the time in which they grow fat; when they are awakened, they suck their fore-seet (which are sweeter than their hind-seet, because they are more in use) and do exceedingly like the juyce which they fack from thence.

4. The female is faid to be very leacherous, and doth bring forth very deformed young ones, which are so deformed, that as soon as they are brought forth, it feems to be but a meer lump of flesh ; without eyes or hair, and little bigger than a Monse, but not so big as a Cat, which she afterwards brings into thape and form by licking of it: therefore Virgil said, that he composed his Verfes as Bears do form their young ones, viz. by licking, i. e. with a great deal of difficulty. Sealiger proves the contrary, Exercitat. 6. Sect. 15. where he alleadges that there have been feveral Bears found in the Alps big with young, which were cut open, and the young ones were found to be perfectly shaped in all its parts; and others have observed that the young ones of Bears as foon as they are brought forth, are enclosed in a certain skin, which cannot be got off but by licking, and it is a long while ere they can get it off fo too.

5. The Female hath a great love and affection to her young ones, and fits over them as a Hen doth

56 The villary of Brutes; or, over her Chickens, by which she cherisheth them exceedingly.

6. She is very fierce and cruel when she hath young; therefore Solomon saith, that is it better to meet a Bear robbed of her Whelps than a fool in his folly, Pro. 17. 12. thus we find God speaking, Hos. 13. 8. I will meet them as a Bear that is be-reaved of her Welps, and will rend the caul of their hearts; so 2 Sam. 17. 8. We find that Davids counfellours were compared to Bears.

7. They love to be in Caves and secret places; and if they can find none, they will make themfelves a hiding place with boughs of Trees, which they will place so closely together, that it will shelter them from rain.

8. They exceedingly love honey, and oftentimes do smell out Bees in a hollow Tree by the scent of the Honey-combs, which they desire, possibly, not so much out of love to the Honey, as to be stung with Bees, which cures them of the Head-ach, a disease with which they are often troubled.

9. It is very strange and wonderful to see how they will climb a Tree, and with their paw will tear off the bark from the Tree where the Bees are.

10. They will eat any thing; as Pears, Nuts, Plumbs, flesh; yea, some will eat Carrion: and if at any time they perceive that they have over-charged their stomacks, they eat Pismires, which causeth them to vomit, which easeth them; they are also very full of revenge, and if any one doth in jure injure them, they will be sure to be revenged of him; and though they are useful in carrying of burthens, and drawing of water, yet their Masters often find, to their cost, that they are revengeful and perfidious. Further, it is to be observed, that a Bear is extraordinarily delighted with musick. Paulus Diaconus, and Olaus Magnus telleth us a story, that there are multitudes of Bears in the South, who oftentimes will come to Shepherds, and will make them play to them, till hunger forceth them to go away; and as soon as they are gone, the Shepherd will found his horn, by which they are so affrighted, that they will never come more.

Moreover (as we faid before) it is a very mischievous Creature; they are often seen upright standing on their hind-feet, and many of them will leap very well, and are very nimble and agile in several other Actions; as running, dancing, &c. Sindrigal, Prince of Littavia, had a certain Bear which he had brought up by hand, and used fo to the house, that he would every day come out of the wood to his house and knock at the door, and wait like a beggar, untill fome one had brought him some meat, which when he had got, he returned into the wood again; other Bears have been feen to hunt Cows and Horfes; and if they see a Cow with Calf, they will with more eagerness pursue her; some tell us that when the female hath young ones, she will work her self on her back to the Cave where her young ones are, lest any one by her foot-iteps should follow her to her Den: Den; but if she perceive that the Hunters have followed her, and have espied their Den, she then immediately takes some of her young ones in her mouth, and some on her back, and carryeth them into some high Tree.

Again, he is often troubled with fore eyes; there are abundance of them almost in all parts; except in Africa, and Numidia; and therefore Virgil was much mistaken, when he speaks of the Bears of Africa; he never drinks as the Dog, nor sups up the water as other Creatures do, but as it were bites it up.

Hunts-men have no device to entrap them so well as by laying honey over the pit-sall, which they smelling, come immediately to the place where it is, and so are got; but they have several other wayes to entrap them; one cannot more enrage a Bear, then to strike or cut him on the Nose, which is the tenderest part about him; hence the Proverb, As good take a Bear by the Nose.

Further, it hath an inveterate hatred against Horses; and as in other Creatures, so in this, their hatred remains after their death; hence it is reported, that a Bear will slye at the sight of a Hor-fes skin.

Thus much for the properties of this beast, we will next consider what we may learn from it. The Holy Scripture compares the Persian Monarchy to a Bear, because as the Bear after he hath seized on any man as a prey, the first thing he doth is to slea off his skin, which is a sign of his cruelty; so the Persian Kings were very cruel and inhumane in punish.

punishing Offenders and Malefactors, as Cambyfer, who inflicted this punishment on an unjust man, viz. He commanded his skin to be flead off. There are three things, especially, to name no more, in which the Persian Monarchy and a Bear are alike.

1. As a Bear doth exceedingly love and delight in Honey, which by the scent they find out; so the Persians are meer gluttons and Epicures, wholly given to delight and pleasure; being prodigal in Cloaths, and no less in the surniture of their Houses, it being common among them to have golden Tables, and Beds of the same; neither do they come behind hand in lust and uncleanness, for Cambyses defloured his own Sisters; and Herodotus reports of them, in his fifth Book, that it was a Custom among them, at any feast or banquet, for every one to bring in his Concubine.

2. As Bears are often troubled with fore Eyes; fo the Persians had very little skill or insight in Military affairs; fo Herodotus, lib. 7. affirms that Xerxes brought an Army into the field, consisting of almost an incredible number, yet he could not subdue the Gracian Monarchy: so likewise the Persians, when they fought against Hellespont, where a vast Army of the Persians were easily overcome by Alexander the Great, as the Reader may see more at large in Q. Curtius.

3. As Bears are observed to have very weak heads, several of them at Rome having been killed with a small blow on the ear; so the Parsians giveing themselves wholly up to lust and pleasure, did destroy the natural strength and vigour of their bodies, which was the reason of that ill success which we read they had in all their wars. Herodotus, lib. 3. tells us, that after a war, feeing the heads of many Egyptians and Persians, he observed the heads of the Persians to be softer, whenas the heads of the Egyptians were much harder and firmer, they wasting their strength in lust and lasciviousness: there are several things I have observed in the nature of a Bear, which may not unfitly be compared to a Scholastical and Philosophical life; for instance, the Bears, at first when young, are very deformed Creatures, untill she by licking them hath brought them into shape; thus it is most commonly amongst Scholars, the first thing they put out is not so polite and well digested as the next is: and then secondly, as the Bear hath a great love and affection to her young ones, thus we see that Scholars do set a high price and value upon the first fruits of their study. Thirdly, as the Bear is so good at climbing of Trees, thus learned men should make it their chiefest business to feek those things that are above. Again, as a Bear loveth Caves and Dens, thus Scholars love retiredness and secrecy; moreover, as the Bear when he is tyed to a stake, will still be walking round it; thus the Scholar delighteth to be in his study, and among his Books, spending all his time. there. Again, as Bears love honey, thus learned men cannot endure to spend their time in reading of dull Books, but in those Books wherein they find something of sweetness, the reading of which

A Description of living Treatures. Gr which is their chief business; for eating and drinking that is a thing they do by the by, as the Bear that doth not drink as the Dog, nor supup his water as other Creatures do, but doth as it were bite up the water when he drinketh. And as the Bear loveth Musick, so do Philosophers, who are like to this Creature for passion and revenge; and as these Creatures are deformed, oftentimes troubled with bad eyes, having but weak heads; thus it is most commonly with Scholars, who are oftentimes troubled with the same distempers; who oftentimes are seduced with the pomps of this World, and blinded with the vanities thereof, as they say that Bears if you hold but a bright silver Basin before their eyes, they cannot fee. Albertus telleth us of certain white Bears, which are Amphibious, and live both in the Air and Water: I have read that Heliogabalus sent several Bears into the Room where were several of his guests, whom he had made drunk. I need not speak of those men that have been turned into Bears, which as it feldom happeneth in Phylicks, yet it is often seen, as to their Morals; some being more like Bears than men, as others are like Swine.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Panther, or Leopard.

He Panther, or Libbard, is called in Low-Dutch Lin Panterthier, which is also called in Dutch Panther, the Female is called a Libbard or Panther; it is a Creature which is found in Asia, the Males are as big as a Calf, the Females as big as a Beagle; it is a fierce and crafty Creature, his skin being full of little spots.

r. He is very fierce, and especially aims at amans eyes, as Basil saith in these words, I have seen and partly heard, as a thing most certain, that the Panther, of all Creatures, is the greatest enemy to man; some have shewed him the picture of a man, which with a great deal of rage he hath tore to pieces, which is an evident argument of his hatred to man; thus we may plainly see what an Enemy Satan is to God, by that enmity which he shews to man, which is his Image; thus far St. Basil.

2. As he is fierce, so he is very swift and nimble; thus Oscinis, in his History of Portugal, lib. 9. reports that the King of Portugal sent forth a Panther which was somewhat tamed, who notwithstanding when he was let loose into the fields or woods, did with a wonderful eagerness destroy several beasts which were in the field; as Harts,&c. A further instance of their swiftness we have, Hab. 1. 8.

God

God saith he would bring the Chaldeans upon them, whose Horses should be swifter than Leopards.

3. It hath a very beautiful skin, ipotted with divers Colours, the spots are like an eye, so that his skin looks as if it were full of eyes, the spots are blacker in the Male than in the Female, to which the Prophet alludes, fer. 13. 23. saying,

Canthe Leopard change his spots?

4. It is very crafty and subtle, and hath a very deformed head, insomuch that it frightens all other Creatures (as all other Creatures hate a Cat, or any thing like it) but the rest of her body is very beautiful and comely, which is the reason why she hideth her head between her legs: it is observed that she is most cruel to any beautiful Creature; thus fer. 5. 6. The Wolf of the Evenings shall spoyl them, and the Leopards shall watch over their Cities, every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces: For he oftentimes feigneth himself dead, or fast asleep; or essentially the hideth her self that so she may better take other Creatures for her prey.

grant and pleasant smell, by which means he draweth other Creatures to him, and so maketh a prey of them; thus Aristotle, in his Problems, Sect. 23. Quest. 4. enquireth into the reason why a Panther of all other Creatures should smell the sweetest? Some learned men tell us that it is from the place they are in, Asia being a hot Region, all sweet scents being hot and dry; yet we may very well doubt of this reason, untill we have plainer evievidence of the truth of it.

6. If he hath at any time eaten any poylon, he presently seeketh for some of mans dung, which he with a great deal of eagerness devoureth, and it is a certain remedy for him, speedily curing him.

7. It is observed that they will sleep three whole dayes together, and after he is awake he roareth out, and then it is that his body smelleth the sweetest, at which time abundance of Creatures are drawn to him by the scent of his body.

8. Although he be so fierce and cruel a Creature, yet it is reported of him, that he is not unmindful, or ungrateful to any one that doth him any courtesie: for the truth of which we have the testimony of several Historians, which do affirm that if he meeteth a Passenger that is wandring up and down in a Wood and cannot get out again; if he hath formerly shewed any kindness to his young ones, he will take him and fet him in his way. Elian telleth us that the Leopard, while young, accompanieth with the Kid; it is reported that a certain Kid being cut to pieces, and given to the Leopard to eat, he would not touch it, being his old companion. Although men oftentimes do indeed devour as it were their neer relations.

9. If at any time he hath touched any poylonous flesh, he immediately dieth. The Panther hath an inveterate hatred against three kinds of Creatures more especially.

The first is the Dragon, whose voice he cannot endure, neither the scent of him.

2. He hath an inveterate hatred against the

Hyanas

Hyana, and that not only while he is alive, but after he is dead; so he hateth the Leopard, that if he seeth a man that hath only his skin, he will sall upon him and destroy him; it is affirmed by some; that if the skin of a Hyana and a Leopard be hung up both together, the hairs of the Leopards skin will all fall off. 3. He is a great Enemy to the Cock, he cannot endure his slesh, insomuch that he will not meddle with a man that he smelleth hath eaten of a Cock.

it. The Female is not so cruel as the Male, for she hath a very large heart; the reason why she is so timerous and fearful, if at any time she doth any mischief, it is meerly out of fear.

12. The Female is very leacherous, she not only coupling with the Panther, but with the Lyon also.

13. The Females skin hath a more fragrant and odoriferous smell with it then the skin of a Male.

14. Although this Creature be so valiant and subtle, yet it is easily intoxicated with wine, which he is very greedy of; therefore it is that the Huntsman pours wine into the water that he drinketh sirit in a morning, and when he is very thirsty, he is drawn with the scent of the wine to the place; after he hath drunk, it slyeth into his head, which maketh him wanton, sporting himself in the fields with other Creatures, until at last they are tired, and fall alleep; so that then they are easily taken; and thus we have shewn the several properties of this Creature, let us now see what is to be learned from them; and although we may compare them to all cruel men, to Devils, &c. yet we will first take notice what the Scripture faith; thus we find it comparing the Grecian Monarchy (as also Alexander the Great, who was a chief member of it) to the Panther or Leopard; the reasons of which according to Pererius, and others, are these that follow.

1. As the Panther is no bigger than a Beagle, yet is very strong, thus we see that Alexander the Great had but a small Empire, yet with an Army consisting but of 40000 men, conquered the Eaftern Countries.

2. As the Leopard is a very swift Creature, thus we read how that Alexander the Great, in the space of twelve years had got the whole Empire to himself, for at twenty years of age he enjoyed his Fathers Kingdom, he dyed when he was but thirty three years of age, at which age men use to have but little of any experience and prudence; but how much he gained in those twelve years, we shall know hereafter more at large: he being once asked how he brought about such great things in so small a time, he answered, μεδεν αναβαλό μενος, never delaying nor procrastinating any business; but it is much to consider what a fiery bloody Empire he had; therefore Apelles pictured him carrying Lightening in his hand, his Mother Olympias when she was with Child dreamed that it lightned into her womb, and that it caused a great flame. In seventeen dayes time he built that noble City of Alexandria, seated upon the River Tanais. In three fights he conquered all Afia, and built Leventy seventy Cities, and as Hieronymus saith well, that he was rather famous for his victories than his war, thus we read in the Prophet Daniel, who speaking of the Leopard, chap. 7. v. 6. saith, that dominion was given to it; for when he came to Ferusalem and met the High-Priest there, he fell on his knees and worshipped him, being asked the reason why he would so debase himself, he answered, that he did not Worship the man, but God; for the night before God did appear to him in the shape of a High-Priest, and promised him several Victories.

3. As the Leopard hunteth all fiving Creatures, and maketh a prey of them, so the Dominion of Alexander was very large, as the Prophet Daniel saith, that he had dominion over the whole Earth; thus 1 Machabees, it is said that he went even to the ends of the Earth, for he had overcome the greatest part of Europe. All Asia, Macedonia, Armenia, Ilerica, Albania, Cappadocia, Syria, Egypt, Mount Taurus, Caucasus, Media, Persia, India, and indeed, all the Eastern Countries in general: feveral Kings being subject to him; and he had gone further, had not his Army mutynyed as the learned have observed out of Q. Curtius; coming from the East to Babylon, he found there the Ambassadors from several Nations, not only from those which he had conquered, but from those which he had not conquered; as out of Africa, Spain, France, Italy, and also from the Romans themselves, and he had conquered the whole Mediterraman, and the rest, had he lived a little longer. 4. A.

4. As the Leopard hath a most sweet and fragrant smell, thus Alexander was not only civil and courteous to all, and happy and successful in all he undertook, but as Plutarch, affirmeth, he had a fweet smell came from his Body, he being of a hot and moist temper; we will not now speak any thing of his converting the Barbarous Nations, how he instructed them how they ought to cherish and nourish their Parents, and not to destroy them, as some of them did, he also taught them to abstain from incest, it being common among them to lye with their own Mothers. From his loyns came four Kings, viz. Antipater in Macedonia, Antigonus in Afia, Seleucus in Syria, and Ptolomey in Egypt.

5. As the Leopard is a fierce and cruel Creature, thus Alexander, he overcame and destroyed all his Enemies, he never fat down before a City, but he took it; although he hath fought with the Enemy when they have been Armed, and his Souldiers unarmed, yet he got the Victory; many times he hath fought alone himself, and scaled the walls himself.

6. As this is a most crafty subtle Creature, so Alexander by his policy overcame many wife and grave Seniors, he had a quick and ready wit, he having an extream love to all learned men.

7. As the Leopard is full of spots, but beautiful ones, so there were in Alexander many vertues together, for he was like Achilles, and like Aga-memnon for chastity, for piety like Diomede, and like Cyrus for Magnanimity, and for a quick wit like like 7 hemistocles, and for learning like his Father; but what soever we have said of him, or can say of bim, is less than he deserveth.

8. As the Leopard is a furious Creature, and cannot be taken but by wine; thus Alexander is faid to have loved wine extraordinarily, and when he was drunk he was guilty of many enormous crimes; he often drunk so much that he slept three dayes together; he would often appoint drinking matches, giving large rewards to them that over-came; when he was drunk he fet that famous City Persepolis on fire, and killed his dear friend Cliens when he was in drink, at which he grieved fo much, that it had almost killed him; he once made a feast, to which he invited 9000. guests, and to every one he gave a golden plate; so that he who once overcame the whole world, and was most chast and continent, at last could not overcome his voluptuousness and gluttony. Q. Curtius, in his tenth Book, goeth about to excuse him for this; we may also learn from what we have read of this beast, to apply them to several other noble men, who being destitute of divine grace, although at first were famous for many noble and Heroick actions, and would flick at no dangers, yet at last lost all this, and came to fad and tragical ends. Hereules was in some things very like to a Leopard, de-stroying all Thieves and Robbers, at last being o-vercome with his own lust and passions, he gave himself wholly up to Women, one of which knocked him on the head with a Slipper; thus Themisto-eles, who overcame all the Persians, and kept all F 3

70 The history of Brutes; or,

Greece under him, yet in his old age he was so leacherons, that he was drawn into the Market-place by four Women instead of Mules; moreover now I will compare this Leopard to the Devil, as St. Basil did, for

1. As the Leopard is so crafty and subtle, so we cannot express the malice and subtilty of this common enemy.

2. Thus the Devil (as the Leopard hath a most fragrant scent) sometimes transformeth himself into an Angel of light; and as the Leopard hideth himself, feigning himself to be dead, or asleep, the easier to ensnare his prey; so the Devil oftentimes covereth his temptations with fallacies and deceits, the better to take the simple: and as the Leopard with a great deal of eagerness leapeth upon his prey, so the Devil is never sluggish nor flothful in tempting of us, but he doth (as he is a roaring Lyon) fuatch away the wicked; finally, as the Leopard never changeth his spots, so he will not leave off deceiving mankind; nay, by fo many years experience as he hath had, he is much craftier, and now in these later ages he is more fierce and cruel, by how much the nearer he feeth his Judgment coming; and therefore we ought alwayes to implore the Son of God that he would restrain and confound this cruel Creature; but so much for the Leopard.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Tyger.

Animals, Chap. 29. saith, that in Asia are found more cruel beasts, in Europe stronger, and valianter; but that in Africa there are beasts of stranger shapes; and therefore this Creatute being found only in Asia, is more sterce and cruel; as for the Etymology of the word, Tyger is an Armenian word, and lignifieth in that tongue, an Arrow; hence it was that in ancient times there was a River called by the same name, because it ran so swiftly.

T. This Creature is found most commonly in Hircania, being generated only there; hence Virgil, in the second Book of his £ miods, calleth them Hircanian Tygers ...

1. It is like a great Horse for the bigness of it.

3. It is a very swift beast, and almost incredible; whence in former times it was called an Arrow.

4. It is as strong as swift, therefore it is said to be itronger than an Elephant.

5. His skin is all over spotted, and therefore this heast is what the Peacock is among Birds, most comely and beautiful.

F 4 6, It

6. It hath such a fragrant scent, that it cometh not behind any other Creature.

7. By reason of its swittness and fierceness, it is very difficult to be taken; but especially when it is grown to any bigness, therefore Huntsmen use this itratagem for the taking of them. They take notice what time she bringeth forth in, and where, as also when she goeth to take her prey, as foon as she is gone, one rideth on Horse-back, and tateth away all her young ones, and bringeth them away with all speed; as soon as ever she is returned from her prey, she knoweth by the scent which way the Hunter is gone, and doth pursue him with all speed, but when the Huntsman seeth him not far from him, he letteth one of them fall, this the taketh and carryeth to her Den, and cometh again; and he droppeth another, she carryeth that to her Den; she overtaketh him again and again, so often that he has scarce one left. Or else he doth thus, if he intendeth to take them all, then goeth another way to work, that is thus; he goeth to the Den, and taketh all her young ones away with him, but when he perceiveth that the Tyger doth pursue him, he setteth down a great Lookingglass in the way, and one of her young ones by it, as foon as the Tyger cometh to the glass, she wondreth to see her self in the glass; she seeing the resemblance of the young one that lyeth by it in the glass, thinking that to be another, striveth with a great deal of eagerness to get that out of the glass, in the mean while the Huntsman rideth a-uay with all the rest, and carryeth them aboard;

A Description of living Creatures. 73 the Dam standing upon the shoar, roareth out, and rageth for madness.

8. The Males have no love at all for their young ones; but when the Huntiman cometh, will fly away: but the Females are so careful of them, that they will lose their lives for them,

9. There are a certain people of India, which are faid, at this day, to find Tygers that are as big as two Lyons, and have things in their tayls, which they put out if they meet any one.

10. It cannot endure the found of Drums, which maketh him run mad, and tear himself to pieces.

11. Although it be so fierce a Creature, yet Augustus Casar had one which he had tamed, which he brought to Rome; and Amelianus Casar, besides several Tygers, he brought Elkes, Camels, and Panthers; and thuswe have shewn the several properties of this beaft, which we can refemble to no thing fo like as to she Turkish Empire; for,

1. As the Tyger is a strong, fieree Creature;

thus is the Turkish Empire, Potent and Rich.

2. As it is the swiftest Creature, so neither are the Turks long in taking counsel, and whatsoever they propose to themselves in war, they do it without any long deliberation about it: and as this Creature doth cast forth a most fragrant scent, thus the Military discipline that the Turks have doth far exceed other Nations; moreover, as the Typers skin is full of spots, thus the Turks have some small vertues, but joyned with enormous vices; as their daily prayers which they fay feemingly with a great deal of attention, as also their several kinds of washings :

washings; washing their whole bodies, their eyes, mouth, privities; they are very cleanly in their dyet; they will not suffer any unclean Creature to be where they are, they have certain conveyances in the Tents for all manner of filth, which runs into several ditches, which are daily covered with Sand, lest the stench that cometh from it should infect the Air; further, in their Market-places they have several deep holes, wherein they cast all the filth of the beafts that they kill, as their excrements, guts, &c. they are very severe in punishing any one that playeth at any game for money; as also those that neglect their kind of worship are exceedingly derided and scorned by all people; if any one is not feen at their worship for three Fridayes together, he is immediately excommunicated; they make mention of their Gods with a great deal of reverence, if they find any pieces of paper, they either burn them or hide them, if they think that the name of Mahomet is written in sit: when they pray, they turn their faces to-ward the South, but when they ease nature any wayes, they take a great deal of care that they turn not their faces to any of their Moschs, or Temples; when they go into their Temples, they pull off their Shooes, which they do when they sit down to meat; so that in these, and several other things, they far exceed several others; for although they have no great love for the Arts and Sciences, being ignorant of their very names, yet they are very great Linguists, and honour every man according to his skill in the Tongues, they finding finding a great deal of profit and advantage in the knowledge of the Tongues; but on the contraty they are guilty of many hainous vices; for,

1. They are very cruel and unnatural, fo that the very Emperours themselves as soon as they have the power in their hands, they put all their Brethren to death, nor have they any regard or respect for any of their Concubines, oftentimes taking them Captive; they use their Enemies like Bealts, which they sell, or else put them to cruel torments, nay oftentimes they will put out their eyes, others they will pull their skin off, and several other wayes of cruelty they have among them, that they exercise upon their Enemies: and although they give a great deal of honour and reverence to their Kings while they are alive, yet after they are once dead, they then care not what they do; they will mutiny, rob his Treasury; but this will be too tedious a business to follow any further, it being but a digression, I shall say but a little more of it.

5, As Tygers cannot endure the found of Drums, thus the Turks banish from them all good Arts and Sciences, as Rhetorick, Physick, Limning, but especially Musick; because they know that they are apt to use it immoderately. Finally, although Tygers are so sierce and cruel, vet have been, and may be tamed; thus the Turks, were they governed as they should be, would soon be a more civilized people; as to the difficulty that there is in the taking of their young ones, Erasmus applyeth it to niggardly covetous men; for as Huntsmen think think they do very well in robbing the Tyger of her young ones, so those that possess other mens Estates, think they have them lawfully, and at first satisfie themselves with thoughts of returning it back again; thus we see how the several properties of a Tyger may be applyed to several other things. Thus we see a Tyger, pictured lying by Bacchus, which signifies to us, that men when intoxicated, are more sierce than they are at other times.

CHAP. X.

Of the Elke.

The Elke is only to be found in the Northern parts of the World; they are chiefly to be found in the Woods of Muscowy, as also in Illyria. Aristotle saith nothing of this Creature, neither doth Pliny, speaking nothing of his shape, or nature, but only nameth it; this Creature is bigger than a Hart, and more hairy, his hairs are almost the same with the Hart, but something more like to an Asses hair, as Scaliger hath well observed; and therefore it is that the Helvetians call it a wild Ass, others call it a Horse-Stag. There is another beast in Muscowy, which is a very swift Creature, which is very like to this Elke. Julius Casar in his Comment of the French war, lib. 6. describing the Wood Hyrcinia, saith that it did extend much

A Description of living Creatures. 77 towards the North, and further addeth that he found in it the Elke, and the Machlin,

3. It is like a Goat, whose fore-head is two handfuls broad, his upper lips are very large.

4. His legs have no joynts.

5. He hath horns, but they grow only backwards, the Hoofs of this Creature do cure and heal all Epileptical diseases in young Children, it being covered with gold, and so hung about his neck; there are some who instead of this, sell an Oxes Hoof, but it is very easie to discern the difference, for if you shave an Oxes Hoof, it will have a very bad smell with it, which this hath not.

6. It hath a doleful, mournful cry, as I my felf have heard, so that if you did not see it, you would think it were a young Child, and therefore it is that the Germans call it Glen. They have been tamed and ridden upon; others have used them for drawing, it being a very swift Creature, and will go further in one day than a Horse doth in three, especially upon Ice, where he will go much faster than upon the Earth: Thus we have shewn the nature of this beast, which somewhar resembleth a Christian; as, 1. His leg is without any joynts, fo that if it lye down, it cannot get up again; thus Christians are seldom guilty of any craft or fubtilty, and not armed with any external power, for if they once fall into any danger, they are not able to deliver themselves; and as she never goeth backwards, lest she should be got in a snare; thus Christians have a great care lest they thou ld should be ensuared with the snares of this World. Further, as she goeth swister upon the Ice than upon the Land, thus the Church hath alwayes gained more by afflictions then by prosperity. Finally, as the Hoof of this Creature cureth the Epilepsy, so to be conversant among Christians is the only way to be kept from Vices, that are the diseases of the mind; there might be more corrolaries drawn, as we might apply the nature of this beast to Counsellours, Merchants, and almost to all sorts of men, they are very watchful while they are feeding, and very swift in flight; it is a rare thing to meet with those that will give us good counsel, and when once we have deliberated upon it, then to follow it without delay: we should carefully lay up good counsel, and if we have a secret told us, not to reveal it.

Of the Unicorn and Rhinoscerote.

E have two questions to answer, before we begin to speak of these two Creatures; as a. Whether there be any such thing in nature as a unicorn.

2. Whether an Unicorn and a Rhinoscerote, be one and the same beast.

As concerning the first doubt, whether there be such a Creature as the Unicern or no; some learned men have denyed that there is any fuch Creature as an Unicorn, but only an Indian Afs, for many approved Authors do fay, that Indian Affes have but one horn, but the Scripture draweth many inferences from the nature of this beaft, and doth apply them to good men and bad men, nay, even to Christ himself, therefore it must nessarily follow that there are such Creatures as Unicorns, and according to that judicious writer, Julius Casar Scaliger, in his exercitations against Cardanus, quoteth one of his friends that saw one.

As for the second question, whether a Unicorn and a Rhinoscerote be not the same. The word in Hebrew for a Rhinoscerote, which is -Rheem, signifieth an Uniforn, and a Rhinoscerote also, the other Hebrew word which the Jews use for it is 77, Rhum, which signifieth both the Unicorn and the Rhinoscerot, thus we find several have used Rhinoscerote and Monocerot for one and the same Animal; but Julius Casar Scaliger in his Exercitations affirmeth the contrary, that the Unicorn and the Rhinoscerot are two several Creatures; for the Unicorn hath but one horn in his fore-head, but the Rhinoscerot hath two, one little one in his fore-head, and a great one in his fnowt, from whence he taketh his name; but because in the holy tongue we have but one name for them both, we will handle the properties of them both in this Chapter.

The Unicorn is a Creature about the bigness of a Horse, he hath the beard of a Goar, the head of a Hart, he hath a neck with a large main, he hath the feet of an Elephant, the tayl of a Hog, he hath one black horn in the middle of his fore-head about two cubits long. The Rhinoscerot is a very large Creature, and is almost as high as he is long, but hath very short legs, and two horns, as I said before; but because they are both such large Creatures, and therefore the Fews have but one name for them both, that cometh from an Hebrew root Ram, which fignifieth high exalted; moreover the Rhinoscerots horn is evceeding hard, which he often sharpneth and whetteth upon a stone, when at any time he is to encounter with any other beaft; for the Rhinoscerot hath an natural enmity against several Creatures, but especially against the Elephant, which two are alwayes at variance one with another; in the Combate the Rhinoscerot aimerh at the Elephants belly, which is his tenderest part, and doth often overcome him; against whom the Elephant fighteth very fiercely with his horn that he hath in his snowt. His back is of a dapple gray, and defended as it were with divers shields, from whence we may gather the great itrength of this beatt (Philippus Camerarius speaking of the Rhinoscerot, faith that is is something lower than the Elephant, but is as long as a wild Ox, he is cloven footed, but his skin is of a box colour, but so hard and impenetrable, that it is like Armour to him; he hath no weapon to defend himself with but his horn, with which he often runneth through the belly of the Elephant, which is his chief Enemy; but in the Combat the Elephant hath a great care lest the Rhinoscerot should thrust against his throat, which if he did, it would food firangle him; the hatred and enmity that there is between these two Creatures is very great, and almost incredible. Immanuel King of Portugal carried a Rhinosceroz to Rome, but in the way they were Ship-wrackt: the Rhinoscerot although he were shackled, yet it was wonderful to fee what shift he made to swim, but at the last he perished in a Rock, Philippus Camerarius tells us another story of the Rinoscerot, who when he was fet on shoar, was perceived to tremble and shake extremely; the reason of which afterwards was perceived to be an Elephant which he there saw afar off; the Rhinoscerot betakes himfelf to fight, and with a great deal of eagerness pursues the Elephant, making a lamentable noise as he went, and deltroying all before him.

We come now to speak of the Unicorn, and the first thing observable is his horn, which is two Cubits long, white and shining within, but is black without; it is not light nor hollow as other horns are, neither is it so plain and smooth, but is sharp and rough like a file, and at the end of it as sharp and piked as a sword, so that he easily runs his horn into any thing.

2. Although he be very figree, yet he is mild and gentle to the Females, and is often found afleep by them in the fields, by which means they are taken; they have another way to take them, viz. To cloath a strong young man in womans apparel, perfuming his garments with rich scents, and so to stand in the fields; the Unicorn smelling him presently comes to him, the huntsmen-hide themselves, but yet keeps within fight of him; the young man layes his hands upon his eyes, and fo blind-folds him, whereupon the Huntimen come foftly behind him, and take him.

3. The Unicorn is so exceeding strong that it is invincible, a wild Creature, inhabiting only Mountains and Desarts, to which Job alludes; who speaking of the Unicorn, saith, Chap. 39. 12. Can the Unicorn be tamed, or canst thou bind him? Whence it appears to be very sierce and wild, because it cannot be tamed; for we have tamed Lyons, Panthers, and Tygers, but this we could never tame. 4. It's horn is an excellent Antidote and preservative against poyson, insomuch that if water hath been poysoned, if it be but touched with his horn, it takes away the poysonous quality; it was a Custome in old time among rich men to have drinking Cups made of the Unicorns horn, and when at any time they drank, they used to have a piece of the horn in the Cup, for it is very much commended by Physicians; now having explained the properties of the Unicorn, we will next consider what we may learn from it.

1. Nazianzen, in his 13 Orations, compares the Philosopher and the Unicorn together; for,

1. As the Unicorn loveth folitude, fo he who addicts himself wholly to good learning, desires nothing so much as privacy and retiredness.

2. As the Unicorn loveth to be on the high Mountains fo wife men ought to despile and sleight these worldly things, as below them.

3. As the Unicorn hateth any flavery or fervitude, fo the true Philosopher should be servant to none nor should he dwell (as it were) in another mans brains, taking up and changing his opinions, on anothers judgment.

2. I suppose that that in the Psalms is unknown to few, Psal. 22. 22. where Christ being compassed about with most cruel Enemies, makes sad complaints as of their cruel usage, and compares them to Lyons and Unicorns, saying, in the fore-cited place, Save me from the Lyons month, from the horns of the Unicorn; by which we are to understand, more especially, the cruelty of those who Crucified our Saviour, although it may not unfitly be applyed to all the Enemies of the Gospel; for,

1. As the Unicorn is a very cruel Creatire; fo the Enemies of Christ were strong and cruel.

2. As it is strong and vigorous, so are the Enemies of the Church.

3. As it is very difficult to be taken, and when taken, as difficult to tame it, which Job, Chap. 39. 9. seems to hint to us, saying, Will the Unicorn be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy Crib? Canst thou binde the Unicorn with his band in the surrow, &c. Jothe Enemies of Christ are implacable.

4. As the Unicorn loveth to dwell in solitary places, never keeping company with any other Creature; thus the Enemies of Christ will by no means be reduced to the society of the Church, but do still go on in enmity and harred against it.

3. In other places of Scripture, the Church and femish state is compared to a Unicorn; so Num. 23. 22. it is faid, that God brought them out of Egypt,

he he

he hath the strengta of a Unicorn, and the very same words are there used, Numb. 24. 8. like to which we have Dent. 33. 17: His horns are like the horns of a Unicorn, with them he will push the people together to the ends of the Earth; fo the Family of Joseph is compared to the horns of a Uni-corn; so David, Pfal 75. prayes that his Kingdom might be exalted as the horns of a Unicorn; and ingeneral we may rejemble this to the Church and fo to all holy and pious men that ever have, or shall be in the World; and without doubt the horn is an Emblem of power and strength, as also of defence, which we may liken to the true knowledge of God, and to his presence, aid, and affiltance, and then we may learn,

1. As the Unicorns horn is so high, by which he defends himself against all injuries, so the Churches wellfare and fafety confifts in the knowledge and love of God.

2. And as his horn is an excellent Antidote against all poyson, so the knowledge and love of God is an excellent remedy against all vice.

3. As the chief thing that Huntsmen regard in a Unicorn, is his horn; fo it is most certain that the main reason of the Churches sufferings is (as I may fo speak) her horn, i. e. her great considence and affiance in God.

4. As it is very difficult to take the Unicorn alive. and when she is hunted taketh great care of her horn; thus the Church ought in the midst of all her afflictions to take great heed, lest she lose her horn, i. e. her knowledge and love of God; thefe heads heads of inferences might be further inlarge d I shall add a story which I have read in the third Book of Philip's Declamationes, where he saith, that he saw the Church pictured like to a Unicorn standing, one half of which only appeared, but immediately it appeared in his full proportion; about whom stood divers beasts, as the Elephant, Panther, &c. making a great noise about him; the Unicorn in the mean while standing undauntedly. He addeth there, hat the Church hath in this World sometimes prosperity, and sometimes adversity, but alwayes hath great Enemies, which she at last overcometh; by the way here we may take notice that oftentimes states and Kingdoms are called by the name of horns; for as horns are of no use at all, but only to desend the body, so Kings and Princes, unless they defend the Church, are useles.

4. Also Christ himself and his Kingdom are not unfitly compared to an Unicorns horn; for although we have it not expresly mentioned in the Bible, yet we read in the Book of Numbers, that when Balanm was to bless Israel, he taketh many similitudes from the Unicorn, from whence we may learn, thus the Church shall prevail against the gates of Hell; moreover, as the Unicorn with his horn doth overcome all other Creatures; thus we by this horn of Christ do overcome all the temptations of Sathan, and of wicked men; and as his horn is a Sovereign remedy against poyson, so the Kingdom of Christ is the horn of Salvation, in which sin is destroyed, death is abolished and overcome, and everlasting life promised to all Believers; and as the Unicorn spareth the Female, as being the weaker; thus Christ loveth and cherisheth those that are of a contrite heart; to conclude, as the Unicorn pursueth any one that goeth about to ensnare him; thus Christ doth by his horn (as it were) oppose all that set themselves against his Gospel, insomuch that to all Eternity they shall find nothing but severe punishments and torments, inexpressible and intolerable.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Horse.

The Americans never saw this Creature, till about a hundred years since, and therefore when they saw a man on Horse-back they thought the man and the Horse to be one individual Creature, which made them much asraid of it; this being the Creature that Conquered the Indians; so that the Spaniards, if they could not bring Horses, the Indians overcame them; this is a very useful and necessary Creature to man, and that not only for war, but also for Journeying; concerning his usefulness in war, we have it set down at large in Job, chap. 39. 22, 23. Gc. Hast thou given the Horse Strength, hast thou cleathed his neck with Thunder? Canst thou make him asraid as a Grasshopper?

hopper? The glory of his Nostrils is terrible, he paweth in the Valley, and rejoyceth in his strength, he goeth out to meet the armed men, he mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted, neither turneth he back from the smord. v. 25. He saith among the Trum-pets, ha, ha, he smelleth the battel afar off, the thun-der of the Captains, and the shoutings. These words God himself speaketh of the Horse, as of a noble spirited Creature; in all ages of the World, as well without as within the Church, men have had a great love and care of their Horses, above other Creatures; fo that we find them sometimes to be careful of them, we find Solomon (I Kings 4. 26. had some thousands of Horses, too much confiding in them, against the express command of God. Deut. 17. where we read that the King is not to multiply the number of his Horfes; there were in Egypt many rare Horses, and therefore lest the Fews, by having any converse with the Egyptians, should learn their Customes and manners, God did forbid all Princes to multiply their Horses, which command Solomon violated; for he had several Troops of Horses brought him from Egypt, 1. King. 10. 29. It was a custom among the Persians, to bury the dead Carkasses of their Horses, and therefore we read that Simon at Athens buried his Horses by his own Tomb; and Julius Casar did erect a marble Monument for his Horse in his own Temple; and Antonius verus did set up a golden Image, in honour of his Horse; Poppea Sabina, Nero's Wife, had her Horses shod with golden shooes; Glaucus (in the third Book of Georgick Georgicks) Potneius fed his Horses with mans flesh; Nero did adorn his Horse with a gown that the Senators only wore, and every week allowed them so much; thus Caligula went beyond them all, he inviting his Horfes to dinner, and did make them drink in golden bowls, and would have made one of his Horfes Conful; as he once (a most horrid fact) made himself Priest, and his Horse his associate. Theophylast, Patriarch of Constantinople, alwayes kept above two thousand Horses; which he led not with Hay and barley, but with Spices, Figs, Raisins, Wine, &c. nay, when at any time he was at the Communion, doing his office, if one had come to him and told him that one of his Mares had foaled, he would for joy immediately have left off, and fe en his Mare, and then come again to make an end; thus Alexander, in the honour of his Bucephalus, did erect a great City; foin all Ages of the World great hath been the folly and madness of Princes, in taking over-care for their Horfes; and so we read in Homer, 11. 8. that the wife of Hester fed her Herse as constantly, and with the same dye as she did her Husband. Conradus Gefrer speaking of the Horse, hath digested, in one Alphabetical order, all those proper names that have been formerly given to Horses; but I shall come now more particularly to speak of the nature of Horfes.

1. The Horse is an understanding, docile Creature, but especially are those that are bred in the Islands of the Baltick Sea; and those that are bred in Selandia, though small, yet are very strong;

those

those are observed to be very docile above other Horses: for they will understand their Masters by a nod, or a fign; they have been taught to walk upon their two hinder feet, to sit down, to take their meat with their two fore-feet out of a dish. and to hold up a basin with their fore-feet, to wink. to lay their heads upon their backs, to run round in a Circle, to kneel down that their Masters might get up; they have been also taught to reverence the King, by certain gestures that they are taught, all which Caspian affirmeth that he hath seen; and Pausanias relateth of another Horse, who in the Olympick Games, as often as he got the Victory, would run to the chief Officer immediately, to let him understand that he had overcome; they may be taught to leap over Ditches, to go up hills, and also to go down again; nay, they understand their own names, and oftentimes are feen to be drunk, which they will foon be with Wine, or any strong liquor.

2. It is a warlike fierce Creature, endued with great Arength and courage, metalsome Honses often moving their jaws up and down, foaming at the mouth; for Aristotle telleth us that it is a sign of a frong Horse, if he be in continual motion of one rart or other; motion and heat together or caufing foam, according to that of Virgil,

Stat sonipes, & frana ferox spumantia mardet.

Thus we find Guiccardim, in his fecond Book of the War between the French and the Ital ans, faith that the Horses did as much service in the War as men; biting, kicking, and leaping upon men; which which also appeareth from that place which we quoted in Fobsin War they will neigh, rage, scrape the ground with their feet, their Manes will stand upright, and can very hardly be held in; he knoweth the Enemy; nay, he knoweth the very noise of the Enemies Horses; he is not at all terrified with the Sword, nor is he afraid with the noise of Trumpets, Quivers, Spears, nor Shields, but loveth to be among them, being as valiant as the Souldiers themselves, being daunted with nothing, but pricketh up his ears, and standeth as it were with a great deal of courage; sometimes Horses will not be so stout and valiant, as at other times; thus we read in Virgil, lib. 10. of Merentius Horse, Flet Pallantis equus.

3. There are feveral Creatures which are proud, but the Horse more especially, and that chiefly when he feeth himself to have rich Trappings on, according to that of Virgil, in the third Book of his Georgicks;

Frena Pelethronii, lapithe gyrosque debere, Impositi dors, oatque equitem docure sub armei.

Which take thus in English.

Lapithes first the Art of Riding found,

And Horsemen taught to fight or'e trampled ground? When Bucephalus is naked and hath no Trappings, he will suffer any Horse-courser to ride him, but when once he hath his Trappings, then no one shall back him but his Master Alexander; the like also was observed of Julius Casars Horse, whose fore-feet were very handsom, and almost like unto mens feet; Erasmus applyeth it to poor men, who will will admit any one into their Society; but if once they grow to be rich, they fcorn and despife all poor people.

4. They are very much delighted with any Mufical Instrument; for they are observed sometimes even to weep for joy at it, but most of all he is pleased at the sound of a Trumpet; he terrifieth the Enemy, but himself is not at all afraid; he runneth into the battel, rageth and soameth, but the more when he seeth his Trappings. Pliny speaking of Horses, mentioneth a sort of people in Italy, that taught their Horses to dance at the sound of a Trumpet, which they used to do at great feasts; and therefore when the Enemy waged war with them, they had the best Trumpets they could get, by which the Enemies Horses were so transported, that they would leap and dance, and run with their Masters on their backs into their Enemies Camp.

5. They are the most leacherous Creatures in the World, man onely excepted; they are mad when in the A&t, and will bite any Horse that cometh night hem, but the Mares are more leacherous than the Horses; it is fabulous that is reported of the Mares in Portugal, who are reported, by drawing in the wind, to have a kind of false conception, (as Hens oftentimes lay windy Eggs) but what they bring forth never liveth long; those that would satisfie themselves surther in this point, may read more in the third Book of Georgicks, like to that sabulous report I have read of the Tygers conceiving with the wind; but so great is the leachery made King. Mares cast their Foals standing, which no other Bealts do; the Mare hath a great love for her Foal, for she will dye if they be taken away from her; and if it chance that the Dam dyeth, some other Mare taketh care of the Foal.

7. After they have cast their Foal, it is a long time before she is proud again.

8. The Horse is a fickle and unconstant Creature, not caring much for company, unless in the time of Copulation, and then no Creatures love it more; there is no leader or Captain (as it were) among Horles ,

Horfes, as there is among Oxen and other Creatures.

9. As Oxen delight to feed upon the Hills, Hor-fes, on the contrary, delight to feed upon a plain, where they are most ferviceable in time of VVar; he cannot endure to go in boggy ground, and there-fore Campanus, we read in Livye's Hiltory, advifed the Enemy to go into some Moorish place; the Horse taketh great delight in washing himself, and therefore will oftentimes lye down in the water; when he drinketh he muddeth e water with is feet, but the Ox loveth to drink in clear water; the reason of which may be, because he seeth his shadow the better in it; when Bucephalus was brought to Philip of Macedon, he began to rage as if he were mad; Alexander, though he was but a young man, came to him, and turned him to the Sun, (for if he perceived the shadow of any one, it made him startle) and immediately the Horse was very gentle, to the great admiration of his Father: great care is to be had that tame Fowl be not fed nigh Horses, for oftentimes they scatter their feathers among their meat, which breedeth diseases in them.

10. Horses and Sheep are liable to as many difeases as man is, wild Horses being often troubled with the Gout, and those that are kept up in the Stable with the Iliack passion, the Cramp; they sometimes are stopped in their Ureters, so that they make water with a great deal of dissiculty (which they will do with a great deal of ease if they are brought to a place where there is Sheeps dung)

they have been oftentimes observed at the souls of a candle to cast their soal, as it sometimes happeneth to women in the like case. Some constantly purge their Horses once every year; it is bad for Horses to stand nigh Hogs, and as bad to have their Stalls nigh any stinking Ditch; a Horse as he groweth old, so he groweth hoary, as Aristotle saith.

11. A Horse is a very laborious Creature, especially if he be well fed; Fovins, in his fourth Book, faith, that the Italians laughed at the Germans for cutting off their Horse tayls, but vet he commendeth them, because it maketh Horses fatter; for that nourishment which goeth into the tayl, after it is cut off, ferveth to nourish the body; thus Philip Camerarius, lib. 1. Chap. 36. faith, that in a certain war between Maximilian and the Venetians, the Germanes had the Manes and Tayls of their Horses cut off, which as some are of opinion, maketh them stronger and better for service; I have read in Paulus Vinetus, how that the Tartars used to dock their Horses Tayls, that so they might not hit their Rider with them; but some do not so well allow of it. VVe then may see the falshood of that report, that a Horse is fiercer when he hath no Trappings on, when we see that Horses are delighted in colours, and are proud when they have Trappings on; and fince the Horse is so useful, as we have seen already, to all Countreyes; it is a punishment to those people that eat Horse flesh; as the Tartars, who account the guts of Horses the greatest ornament.

12. They exceedingly hate Bears, Camels, and Elephants:

A Description of living Creatures. 95
Elephants; as Herodotus, in his first Book, and 7.

Chap. giveth instances of more at large.

13. Horses and Dogs are true and constant to their Masters, unless they grow mad; which love is greatly increased by making much of them; no better way to make a Horse mild and gentle, than to forbear striking of him as much as you can; for he will do that by fair means, which he will not do with the Spur and VVhip; these are the several properties of the Horle; we come now, according to our method, to draw some corrolaries from him; we might compare him to Souldiers, but I shall speak to that place, Zach. 1. 8. I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon a red Horse; and he stood among the Myrtle trees that were in the bottom, and behind him were red Horses speckled and white : then said I, Omy Lord, what are these? and the Angel that talked with me faid, I will shew thee what these be; and the man that stood among the Myrtle Trees answered and said, these are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the Earth; To this agreeth that of the Prophet Habakkuk, Chap. 3. 8. That thou didst ride upon thy Horses, and thy Chariots of Salvation; in which places the Apostles and all Ministers are compared to Horses, on whom Christ rideth through the Earth to the eternal salvation of the VVorld; many good inferences might be drawn from the Nature of this Animal; I shall mention but few of them.

1. As Horses carry burthens and packs into several Countries; thus the Ministers preach the Gospel throughout the Earth.

96 The Pikozy of Bzuten, or,

2. As the Horse runneth not where he list, but is guided by the Rider, so the Ministers are by Christ himself placed in several parts of the VVorld.

3. As Horses take the pains, but their Masters receive the profit; thus in all ages good Ministers are exposed to more dangers and difficulties then any other men; thus when Christ preached to the multitude, he was upon the water in a small fisherboat; (so the Ministers are exposed to all dangers) when in the mean time his hearers stood on the shore safe and secure.

4. As Horses, when they go through any Town or Village, shall soon have the little Dogs barking at his heels; so Ministers are still persecuted and perplexed by wicked men.

5. And as we see that the Horse is not at all moved or troubled at the barking of these Dogs, neither do they so much as mind them, but go on their way; so the Ministers of the Gospel do despise and make light of the scorns and jeers that the World putteth upon them.

6. As Horses do take a great delight and pleafure in washing themselves; so it should be the chief care of Ministers to see their lives and conversations, that they be pure and holy.

7. As we see how docile and tractable Horses are, yet sierce against their Enemies; hence Ministers are taught to be meek and humble to all men, but to be armed against the Enemies of the Gospel.

8. As Horses are troubled with many diseases;

thus

thus we commonly fee that Ministers are liable to as many distempers, if normore, than other me n and I may add also, that they are no less subject to Vices,

Further; as in the fore-cited place of Zach. Chap. 1. v. 8. the Son of God was seen to be among those Horses that were in the Prophets Vision; thus have all good Ministers this to comfort them in their greatest miseries and afflictions, that God is with them.

To conclude, as Bucephalus would suffer no one to back him but Alexander; thus should the Ministers take especial care not any wayes to be enfiared to Sathan, and so made (as it were) the Devils Horfes.

We might have spoken to each of these heads much more than we have done. I could have shewn how fitly this Creature might be likened to the Apostles, but especially to St. Taul, who travelled many thousand miles, and carried the Gospel into Spain, Antioch, and Cappadocia; neither was he satisfied with preaching once to a people, but often visited them, to consirm them in the truths that he had preached, &c.

We often find in Scripture, that Horses have been tyred and wearied, as we find the Horses of the Canaanites were, Joshua II. 9. Without question this was to teach the Jews, that they were to put their whole confidence and trust in God; for as a Horse, as we said before, is very sierce, leacherous, and proud; so we are commanded in the place quoted before, to weaken these Horses; i.e.

we ought to root out and avoid those vices, of pride, leachery, &c. Origen, upon the 15. of Exodus, compareth all wicked, carnal men to Horses, who have the Devil for their Rider, and are delighted in the plains of Egypt; by which we are to understand the allurements of this World; he further goeth on and calleth Judas Christ's Horse, because he carried the Gospel to several places of Judea; but as soon as he took the Sop, he had another Rider on his back, who sed him to eternal ruine.
Origen proceedesh to give many other examples, exhorting us to bridle our immoderate affections, which oftentimes like wild Horses do often hurry us to the doing of what is contrary to reason, like to that known verse, Fertur equis amriga, nec audit currus habenes.

Erasmus hath several inserences and corrolaries, which he draweth from the Horse; as I. The Horse, if not tamed, will be ruled by none; thus Man by Nature is a wild and unruly Creature, untill by good education he be better mannered; and as a Horse is not at all the better for his rich Trappings; thus these Worldly enjoyments do not at all better him that possesses them; and as we do not use to put an Asses Saddle on a Horses back; so we ought not to back-bite or cast any reproach on the good name of our Neighbour.

Moreover, as we find that Horses are not tamed by stripes and blows, but by gentle means; so we see that Children at School are not so easily wrought on by the Rod and Ferula, as by mild and gentle words; nay, we often see that good wits

have been spoyled by the over harsh and austre carriage of their Masters.

Further, if at any time we see an unruly Horse, we presently conclude, that it is either for want of care, or skill in the Rider; so also we conclude, if we see a people given to all vice and wickedness, it is the fault of the Clergy.

And as a free Horse needs no spur, so he who loves learning, needs no arguments to make him diligent; and as we do not ride a Horse without a Bridle, and if we see that he begins to be headstrong, then to put on one; so all men who are cholerick; ought to restrain and bridle their passions at the first rilings of them.

And as when a Horse is made tame and tractable, one may ride him without a bridle, and easily guide him; so when once a man hath conquered and subdued his passions, they will not so easily afterwards exceed their due bounds and limits.

As a Horse also, when single; can go in as narrow a path as a man; but when he draws a Chariot, he then is forced to go through thick and thin; so we find it amongst men, who are not content with their condition, but still aiming at preferment, do but thereby run into greater troubles and dangers.

To conclude, as Horses, when they once grow old, are good for nothing but the Cart or the Plough; so while a man is in prosperity, he is beloved of all; but when in adversity, then he is despited of all; Sophocles, in his Electra, speaking of Orestes, his aged School-master, by whose means

he killed Clytemnestre, and Egistus, said he was like a Horse, who though he be old, and have lost his strength, yet did not lose his courage. Wasps and Horners breed in the carkais of a dead Horse, as Bees do in the carkass of an Ox, which we are to understand thus: that such kinds of small infects do use to lay their spawn or Egs in such Carrion; and those things which we read in Exedus, and in the History of Sampson, that were done many of them contrary to the ordinary course of Nature, have made some people think them incredible, and almost impossible, because they have been ignorant of the way, how these insects and all such kinds of little Creatures are generated. Pliny tells us, that although there be jome herbs that will destroy the Palmer-worm, yet if the head of a Mare which hath been with Foal be laid by it, it will preferve it; some people do judge of the goodness of a Horse by his colours; some do tell us that a good Horse must be thus qualified; he must have the eyes, Romack, and neck of a Wolf, the fhortears, long tayl, and foftly tread of a Fox; the breaft, the pride, and the hair of a Woman; others fay, he must be like the Hare for swiftpess and agility; the good eyes, and hairs, tayl of a Fox, the thigh and the hair of an Ass, the pride and suggestion of a VVoman; others say a Horse must be as swift, and leap as a Pike, the sharp sight of a Serpent, the broad breast and thick mane of a Lyon, the cleanliness and soft tread of a Cat: Horses require great skill to keep them well; Horfes do not love to stand in a Stable alone, but are abundance dance better when they have company with them; it is a known thery of the Trojan Horse, that it was destroyed by those that got into it; Joachimus Camerarius, hath written a whole Book concerning Horses, which is worth perusing, where the Reader may satisfie himself further in the nature of this Creature.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Ox.

and Cow under this Creature; there is a beast called Hyreinia, much like to an Ox, which they called by the same Name, a very swift Creature; this word Ox was formerly taken to signific a Calf, which of all the rest agreeth best with the body of a Man; it is a very useful Creature, it was used to be offered in sacrifices, it is good for food, the Husbandman maketh great use of him in tilling his ground; formerly it did thresh the Corn, which was done by leading him over the Corn, and treading it; the Earth is much fatned by his drug shooes are made of his skin, of horns are made Combs, winding horns, and several other things, which we could not well want.

He is a strong Creature, endued with a great deal of valour, yet very gentle.

3. His flesh is very hard of digestion, especially H 3 when when old, which Baptista Porta thinketh would be tenderer, were he baited with Dogs before he was killed, for experience telleth us that the flesh of those Oxen that run among Bears, is so tender that it will almost melt in the mouth, but his blood is thicker; thus it is in other Oxen, that which maketh him appear to be the stronger, is this; that he never Conghs, nor scarce ever bringeth any thing up out of his stomack; (it is observed by some, that a Minister is never heard to sneeze while he is preaching, the reason of which I leave for the more curious to enquire into) this Creature hath many ventricles, by which his food is better digested; he is very hot naturally, whose Milk ferveth for the nourishment of his Body; and thereforelit is that he giveth nor so much Milk, either as the Sheep or Goat.

3. In the time of his Copulation he is like all other Creatures, very mad and furious, but otherwife tame and gentle.

4. He is observed to be given as little to leachery as any other Creature; and as before his Coitus he usually feedeth among Coms, but afterwards he accompanieth himself with Bulls, which Aristotle hath observed to be the nature of several other Creatures; lib. 6. chap. 18. in his History of Animals.

5. He is much delighted in company, and cannot endure solitude; there is a kind of mutual love (as it were) between Oxen that work in the plough together, infomuch that if his fellow be not with him, he looketh about him to fee if he can find him, and will will low untill he cometh to him. I shall not say any thing of his grateful resentment of courtesies, which is spoken of by the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 1. v. 3. where the Ox is said to know his owner.

6. This Creature is exceeding delighted in Mufick, and he never drinketh but in clear cold water.

7. He loveth to be in the woods among the boughs; it is by some observed, that sometimes he feedeth backwards; there is a certain herb in the field that the Ox loveth to feed on rather than grass, in the leaves of which lyeth hid a little Creature, much like a Beetle, which will bite him and torment him fo, that oftentimes he killeth him : an Ox is soonest fat when by himself, and kept from Copulation; but I have been informed, that the quickest way to fatten him, is often to wash him with warm water, and feed him with beans and elm boughs; Baptista was wont to give his Oxen those scraps of meat that came from his Table, which in a short time made them so far, that they could scarcely go; the Ox will work at the plough much better, it he hath a live coal held to him.

8. The Horns of a young Ox laid in hot war will be fost and bend any wayes; the Hoofs of an Ox, if anounted with wax, oyl, or pitch, they are not fensible of any pain.

9. He sheddeth his hair every year; it is very strange that Nanzienzen telleth us, that if the corn that is sown have an Ox horn lye amongst it, that grain shall never grow, be it what it will; the Physical cause of which is not yet found out, although feveral writers, as well facred as Prophane, have deduced feveral inferences from the nature of this beatl, yet for brevity fake I thall name but few of them.

ment, in which there is mention made of this Creature; as that it was offered for facrifice, which was a kind of a Type of Christ, being offered for us, for before the Sacrificing of the beast, they used to lay their hands upon the Heiser, by which Rice was signified unto us, that that particular beast was set apart for Sacrifice; thus the voice that came to Christ from heaven, did fore-tell that Christ should be the general Villime of the World.

in the fight of all the people; thus was Christ crucified before Hiernsalem, in the fight of the whole multitude.

3. As his skin wa flead off, and the beast also dismembered, thus Christ lay naked upon the Cross, there induring many stripes and wounds; and as the blood of the Heiser was sprinkled upon the horns of the Altar; thus by the preaching of the Gospel, is the blood of Christ sprinkled throughout the whole World; and as in old time an Ox or a Comwas given as a marriage pledge, as one, in Homer, gave a hundred Oxen to his Father-in-Law as a pledge; thus Christ is given to the World as a pledge of that Covenant which is made between God and man, since the fall.

Further, as the Ow is the Husband-mans servant, thus Christ was made servant to us all, for he did

(as the spostles) wash the feet of several poor people, yet he himself went on foot into Palestine, and so sinished the work of our Redemption; moreover, as the Ox is a strong Creature, thus there was an infinite power given to Christ; and as the Ox was not an unclean Creature in the Law, but gentle and tame; thus there was never found any crast or guile in Christ's mouth, for he was of all men the most meek and humble, and so inviting all men to him.

Moreover, as the Ox is a gentle time Creature, being feldom feen to fight with his fellows, neither hath he any pride in him, thus was Christ the meekoff, humblelt person that ever lived on the face of the Earth, and all his Sermons which he preached while he was here on the Earth, tended all to exhort them to meekness and humility; it is reported that there are some Oxen in Tartary, which will kneel down like a Camel when they take up any: burthen; thus Christ patiently and willingly took up the Cross; and as we see that Bees are bred out of the carkafs of the Ox; thus by the Death of Christ many have been turned to God, and by this spiritual Death they are restored to life; and as Corn that was but touched with the horn of an Ox will never come up in the ear; thus wicked men, through the just judgments of God perish to all eternity, because of their unbelief. I might have inlarged on each of these particulars, and also upon the several circumstances of the Sacrifice, and also. of the red Heifer, which in the Law was offered for a Sacrifice, which fignified the blood of Christ, one drop of which (as St. Bernard saith) is sufficient for the Redemption of the whole World, were there a thousand more than there are; moreover, we find, that the Ministers of the Gospel, (who represent the person of Christ) are compared in the Holy Scripture to Oxen; the first place where we find them thus compared, is, I Cor. 9. 10. where we find the Apostles thus speaking; If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing, that we should receive your carnal things? i. e. That as the Ox was not to be muzled that trod out the Corn, which Law seemeth to have respect only to Oxen, as appeareth from that place, Deut. 25. 4. yet the Apostle sheweth that when this Law was given it had respect to Ministers; but this will appear, if we consider, we may compare Ministers and Oxen together.

1. As the Ox is a front Creature, endued with a great deal of courage; thus ought Ministers to be valiant for the Gospel, and fight manfully under Chrift's banner.

2. Oxen by nature are gentle, tame, chast, loving to drink alwayes in clear water, and hath a great love to his fellow; thus ought Ministers to be like them in all respects; and as an Ox is useful, whether he be dead or alive; thus ought Ministers, by their preaching and writing, seek to edifie the Church; and as the horns of young Oxen do soften by lying in wax; thus are younger affections easier wrought upon; and as Oxen will labour more, and work harder in the VVinter than in the Summer; thus Ministers get more when under sufferings, a Description of living Treatures. 107 sufferings, then when in a prosperous Conditi-

3. VVe read in the 68. Psalm, that false teachers are compared to Oxen, and their hearers to Bulls and Calves; so that as Oxen are better than Calves, so are wicked Teachers than their people; and as Oxen sometimes (although but very seldom) are seen to quarrel one with another; thus are Ministers too often striving for the supremacy. In Phrygia it is reported that the Oxen will move their Horns; thus we find too often that Ministers are wavering and unconstant. It were very easie to draw more corrolaries from the fore-cited place, but these that we have named shall be sufficient.

4. VVe read that the Enemies of Christ are compared to Oxen, Psal. 22. 13. and that for these reasons especially.

thus the Scribes and Pharisees were the chiefest among the Jews, and most honoured; and as Oxen fometimes will be exceedingly inraged one against another; thus these Enemies of Christ like mad Bulls thirst after the Death and blood of Christ fometimes wicked men are compared to Oxen, unaccustomed to the yoak, Dent. 32. 15. for as the Ox will run away if he seeth any one come to yoak him; so the wicked shun all good exhortations to virtue; to conclude, Nazianzen, in his sourteenth Oration, speaking of those several excuses made by those that were invited to the marriage-Supper, he expoundeth it allegorically thus; he that had bought the land, and was gone to see it; they are those, saith he, that are given wholly to the love of riches; but those that had bought the Oxen, are those that are ambitious of honours and dignities; but he that had married a wife, are meant those that are addicted to the unlawful pleasures of this world, which three sins were the cause of their ruine, and indeed they are the seed that all manner of sins do come from, and of the ruine of most men in all ages of the world; for Adam was drawn to his sin by pleasure, the Devil by honor and ambition, and Judas by covetousness; we have many examples of this in History, but I shall inarge no further.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Ass.

WE read Dent. 22. 10. Thou shalt not plow with an Ox and an Ass together, which words are spoken allegorically, to shew that we should not compare fools with wise men, nor timerous with valiant men; now as to the several properties of this beast.

a. It is a very timerous fearful Creature, he hath a very large heart, but no gall at all, and therefore it is that he will endure more hardship than any other Creature; he is content with his Provender, let it be what it will; and if you lay upon him more than he can bear, he will no wayes complain, or reliet, but fall down under his burthen.

2. His chief provender is hay, the fodder, the whip, and the burthen belong to the Ass, meat, correction, and work to thy Servant, Ecclesiasticus 33. 23. The Ass will eat brambles and Thiftles better than any thing elfe; his skin is very hard and brawny, for he cannot feel a blow with a stick, when he goeth into any field where there is any grass, he is kept from eating it, or any other green herb; and when he is loaded with wheat, he keepeth himself upon hay; the little birds are oftentimes very troubiesome to him, for by rubbing himself against those hedges where the birds build, and by his doleful cry doth so affright the young ones, that were not his eyes very low in his head, the birds would peck them out; he useth to drink in muddy water, he can endure the smell of no oyntment, and if by hard labour he is killed, he is good for nothing but the Dogs, after his skin is pulled off.

3. VVhen once he falleth, he is alwayes afraid of that place; he will scarcely go over that bridge where he can see the water through the crevises of the boards; and if you force him to go through the water, he Urines; he hath but a weak head, and oftentimes is troubled with the dizzines in his head.

4. She so exceedingly loveth her young ones, that she will run into any danger to secure them, he carrieth the form of a Cross (as it were) in his body, he is strongest in his hinder parts, he never doth any one any hurt, but is an innocent harmless Creature, but withat very dull and block sa, yet sometimes he will move his ears, which with him is a fign that he knoweth what you fay; Bodinus relaterh a story of an As that was so tame and gentle, that being commanded to go into the Theatre, he would find out the handsomest woman there, and when the Actors were commanded to fetch him some barley, he would by his gestures express something of joy at the hearing of it; if any one had fpoken to him, he would make some sign that he understood what he said; from whence he inferreth that no Creature is so dull and sensless, but may be brought to understand something, thus far Bodinus: Some have not scrupled to say that what the Ass is made to understand, is done rather by Magick, than by Art, which I think the likelier of the two.

4. There is no Creature so fruitful as this is, for she is with young, when she is but young her felf, and so continueth still to have Colts, untill the is thirty years old.

5. When she is bringing forth, it is alwayes in some dark place, where no one can see her; before he copulateth, he doth with a loud voyce call the Female, continually braying until fhe cometh; and as Nazianzen very well observeth, an Ass will bray although loaden with gold, the flesh of Asses is allegorically compared in Scripture to the grossest kind of Idolatry, which the Jems were alwayes very much inclined unto, Ezek. 16. 26.

6. The Ass will alwayes drink in the same place, if he can go dry to it, for he will not go through any water; he will drink no water at all unless it be like to what he useth to drink.

7. The Ass is a very dull, blockish Creature, having long ears, very impatient of cold; if at any time he chance to eat any Hemlock, it maketh him fleep fo foundly, that you may flea him, and he not feel it; in the Defarts of Arabia are found a kind of wild Affes, that are so swift they cannot any wayes be taken, and if any one by chance is taken, he can never be tamed, nor made to carry burthens. God seemeth to speak of this Creature, Job 39. where he faith, that he hath given a dwelling to the wild Ass. And thus we have sufficiently shewed the nature and properties of the As; there are many things which the Holy Scripture draweth by way of inference from the Nature of this beast, I shall speak to some few of them.

1. VVe read, Gen. 48. 14. that faceb in his prophesying concerning the Tribe of Islachar, saith, that he shall be as a strong Ass. For, 1. As an Ass is of no use in war, so the posterity of Islachar shall be wholly ignorant of war.

2. As the Ass is gentle, will bear great burthens, and will endure hard labour, so his posterity shall chuse rather to suffer, and pay Tribute, so he can but have peace, then to get wealth by war, for peace, though but upon base and dishonourable termes, is better than a war, though never so just. 2. In the same place we find Facob speaking concerning the Nativity of the Messias, where he saith, that he shall bind his feal to the Vine, and his Asses Cols to the shorce Vine; I am not ignorant of the feveral. feveral expolitions that are given of these words, fome expounding it of the universal peace that should be at the coming of Christ, and so Judah sound it when he bound his Assertion to the Vines, which in time of war was not sawful to do; others again do expound them thus; this Assignifieth several Nations, and the Vinethe Church, to significe thus much to us, vizs That Christ should ride upon an Ass, i. e. that he should gather all Nations into his Church, which before for their ignorance and stupidity, might be compared to wild Assertions, seeding upon thorns and thistles, having but an impure Religion.

3. God commanded (Exod. 13. 13.) that the first-born of an As should not be offered to him, but that he should be redeemed with a Kid, or his neck be broken, which the learned have expounded thus; that although God would have the first of all Creatures offered to him, as being the best, yet he would not have the As offered, because he is a dull, sluggish Creature; thus we should have none in the Church that are dull and sortish, and especially among Ministers.

4. Sampson, (Judg. 15.15.) with the jaw-bone of an As killed many of his Enemies, and with it broke open a Fountain; Sampson being a type of Christ, the jaw-bone might signific Christ, by whom we have living water, who also like Sampson subdued all his Enemies.

5. In Samaria, we read that there was such a scarcity of food (2 Kings 6. 35.) that an Assesshed was sold for sourscore pieces of silver, and

the

A Description of living Creatures, 112 the fourth part of a cab of Doves dung was fold for five pieces of filver; which may not unfitly be applyed to the spiritual famine under the Pope, when there was such great rates given for Affes heads: the maintaining of the Monks being mighty chargable, and with no less charge did they buy Doves dung; purchasing the false and pretended Reliques of the Saints at so dear a rate; and I think it may not unfitly be applyed to the Religion of the Turks and Tartars, it being almost incredible, what esteem they have for their Idol-Priest, and at what cost and charges they are to maintain them; and among the Tartars, their chief Priest at certain times rides upon a Horse decked with the richest Trappings, whose hands it is an honour for the King to kis, the Nobles may onely kis his knees, and the common people onely scarcely admitted to kiss his heel; we may not unfitly compare this Creature and the Heathen Oracles together, which fent to Apollinis.

6. The As that Christ rode upon; some expound concerning those Heathen Nations that inhabit among the Jens, which will not bear the yoak of Christ; and in general it may very well be applyed to all Christians, but especially to the Elect; for, 1. As the As was created for the use of man; thus true Christians should strive to be useful to all men.

2. The As feedeth on thorns and briars; thus true Christians are acquainted with infinite charge they obtained of the Devil: those that will see more of it, may read Herodotus, in his second Book concerning those gifts that Cyris

with the dainties of this World. 3. As the Afa will very hardly be made to go through the water, and is alwayes afraid of that place where once he fell; fo ought Christians to have great care of old fins, and not rashly to run themselves upon a temptation; as the A/s hath the figure of a Cross upon his back; thus ought Christians alwayes to bear in mind Christ Crucified, and to study him only, willingly bearing whatever he shall lay upon them; and as the Ass hath Foals when she is old; thus ought Christians to be fruitful in good works, even to their lives end. Moreover, as the Ass, when she c. ft. her Foal, getteth into some Cave, where no one can see her; thus Christians should do nothing to be feen of men, and when they give alms, it must be done so privately, that their left hand must not know what their right hand doth. And further, as the Ass will not willingly drink in any Pond, but where he is used to drink; thus Christians ought to take heed what Doctrines they are that they give credit unto. I have read of a certain Priest in Germany, who in his Sermon said that the Citizens were like Affes, who were forely oppressed with the burthens that were laid on them; but that the Senators were great Asses, they having a greater charge lying upon them, and that the Priests were the greatest Affes of all, the burthen that lay upon them being of the greatest concernment; and at last, lifting up his eyes and his hands, but the King (faid he) cometh not behind any of the rest, the burthen of the whole Nation lying upon him.

The

The wild Ass may represent wicked men, of which there are abundance in the Defarts of Arabia; thus even the whole World is filled with wicked men. And as there is no possibility of taming the wild As; fo it is as difficult a matter to reclaim a wicked person, one that is given over to a reprobate sense; moreover, as this Creature will never cry if it have but good pasture; so neither do wicked men take any care for the next World, if they can but have enough of this. Covetous men may also be compared to Asses, who as they are chiefly employed in carrying of burthens; so are covetous men still heaping the world together, and burthening themselves with the cares thereof; but as the Ass oftentimes is loaden with Corn, but feedeth upon the chaff himfelf; thus covetous men do not enjoy what they have got, not knowing who shall enjoy those riches which they with a great deal of pains and care have scraped together. To conclude, Erasmus hath drawn many inferences from the Ass, comparing illiterate men to them; who as she hath a great love to her young ones, so have they a high eleem of their own works; and although it hath a very large heart, yet is very timerous; thus unlearned men will imitate, and sometimes exceed the learned in their ferious deportment and grave gestures: many teachers there are that are more dull then the Afs, who faw divine vengeance, and the naked fword fooner than Balaam did; for it is often feen that the people are truer Worshippers of God than those that teach them. The Ass may be compared to that knowledge which men have of God, and of his wayes; and Balaam may be compared to the will which oftentimes goeth contrary to confcience, untill they fee divine vengeance coming upon them. The Ass may also be compared to the linner, who runneth on in a full Carreir of sin, untill Christ meetes with him, and stoppeth him; but so much for the Ass.

116 The Pillagy of Brutes; or,

CHAP. XV.

Of the Hart.

He Hart is a Creature commonly known to be I very swift, strong, but timerous; his heart is yellowish; but in Critannia there are some found that have blackish hearts; these are the only Creatures that have yearly new horns. 1. Those Creatures that have great hearts are most timerous, because the heat is more dispersed; but on the contrary those Creatures that have lesser hearts are stronger, according to that faying, vis unit a fortior; fo we read in the first Iliad of Homer, that when Achilles told Agamemnon of his timerousness, he answered him that he had cor cervi, the heart of a Stag. 2. This is a very swift Creature; David giveth God praise that he had given him the feet of a Hart, Pfal. 18. 34. because God had alwayes given him speedy and prosperous success in his enterprises; he is naturally very leacherous, but especially at the rising of Arthurus, at which time he is observed to be fiercer then at other times; it is common among them to fight one with another for a Female, and oftentimes are mortally wounded; at this time their flesh is something rank, like the flesh of Goats; after the Female hath been copulating with a Male, they then do seperate themselves one from another; the Female eateth Cummin, which maketh her bring forth her young ones with a great deal of ease.

3. Although the Hart in some sense may be termed a stupid Creature, infomuch that when she is hunted, if a Horse cometh by her, she perceiveth him not, (for she hath her eyes fixed so on the Huntimen,) yet this may be a great instance of her fagacity and prudence, that she alwayes feedeth and bringeth forth her young ones by the path way, by which she need not fear being made a prey by wild beasts, by reason of passengers coming so often by; she hath a very tender care of her young ones, teaching them to avoyd the snares of the Huntsman, inureth them to runningwhile young; she sheweth them those places which are the securest for them to lye in; as Rocks upon high Mountains, where there is but one way to it, and that but very narrow, and in an eminent danger to run thither; he is often feen to stand fentinel, as it were, upon a Mountain, to fee which wayes the Huntsman goeth, and if he cometh nigh her hole where she is, she will not run away, but resisteth them; we find David, in the 18. Psalm, 33. giving God thanks that he had made his feet like Hindes feet, and had set them upon high places, i. e. That God had made 3 him him as safe as Hindes are inhigh places; if he per-ceiveth himself grown fat, he goeth into some place where there is no path, nor any one passeth by, and if he seeth any man, he hideth himself, because his fatness maketh him that he cannot run so swiftly; thus in the Winter time, for then he is weaker than at other times; and fo when he sheddeth his horns, divine providence hath fo ordered it, that they fall off very easily, for they grow not out of the skull, but out of the skin; the reason of his shedding his horns may be, because if they should grow still bigger and bigger, it would be a burthen to him; or else it may be, because it maketh a greater plenty of his horn (which is of such great use in Physick;) at the time of her bringing forth (which is in the Spring) she goeth aside into some private place, where no one may fee her, and when she lyeth down, she either thrusteth her horn into the ground, or else hideth it where no one can fee it; she goeth out to feed but in the night time; when she hath new horns growing, she tryeth the firmness of them by thrusting them against a Tree, and will never be seen abroad again until her horn is firm and fit for service; and when they are full grown out. The surther is may harden grown out, fhe lyeth in the Sun that it may harden them; from all which it appeareth that the Stag is a wife Creature; the foon apprehendeth any danger approaching, if the pricketh up her ears; but otherwise the is easily taken; in Scythia it is reported that Stags are so tame, that they may be rid on like Horses, Elian reporte th of King Mithridates, that he would lye among Bulls and Horses, that he toge of the all take grants and a differ thad had used familiarly, and also that he often slept with the Stags that he had tamed; if any one had come to him, one would have mowed, the Harse would have neighed, and the Stag would make a great noise until he had awakened him. 5. They exceedingly love musick, and are much delighted in hearing any one sing; and therefore one goeth before a Stag and singeth to him, another cometh behind him and taketh him. 6. When he is so closely pursued by the Dogs, that he seeth there is no hope at all, he will run to the Huntsman, expecting more favour from him, than from the dogs; but some there are, who are of opinion, that this proceedeth from the sierceness of their Nature.

7. He hath no gall, yet his inwards are so bitter that a Dog will not touch them, unless they be very fat indeed; some have reported (but how true I shall not here dispute) that in Achaia there are Harts who have their gall in their tayl. 8. When he is wounded with a Dart, the only cure he hath is to eat some of the herb called Betony, which helpeth both to draw out the Dart, and heal the wound. 9. The Stag is a very sociable Creature, for they alwayes go together in companies; some have been seen to swim over Rivers in great companies; the Captain of them going sirst, and the hindermost laying their heads on the backs of the foremost; and if the foremost be tyred with swiming, another is put in his place, and he swimmeth behind all the rest, and laying his head upon the back of him that is before him, recovereth himfest again; sometimes when he is hunted, he will get himself into a low Tree, and hide himself among the boughs: Many wild beatts do hunt the Hart for a prey, as the weakest Creature; this they do alwayes in the morning, because then hunger pincheth them most; it is a wonderful thing to confider the great Antipathy that there is between a Hart and a Serpent, for he knoweth by natural instinct where the Serpents holes are; he goeth to the hole where he feeth and thinketh a Serpent is, and breatheth upon him untill he is forced to come out of his hole, and then he fetteth upon him, and teareth him to pieces, or else eateth him up: Serpent (after he hath eaten it) maketh him very thirsty, yet he knoweth by instinct of Nature, that if he drinketh any water before it is well digetted, it will kill him; and upon this account he will endure thirst a long while, but at length he runneth to the water so swiftly that he is eyred before he cometh to the water, and when he is come to the fountain; he cryeth for weariness, making a lamentable noise, and panteth untill he hath recovered his breath be-fore he will drink; thus we find David speaking, as the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my Soul after thee, O God, Pfal. 42. 1. when he cometh to the water, he doth not immediately drink, but first plungeth himself in the water, and after he hath eateth so me Crabs (if he can get any) he drinketh. In Lybia there are abundance of Serpents, and if they see a Hart lying along upon the ground, a great company of them leap upon him together, and one winderh himself about his necks another about his back, some about his belly; he being 41 4.

a Description of living Creatures. 121 being thus tormented with them, when he feeleth.

them biting so hard, he starteth up and runneth up and down the fields as it he were mad; at last he throweth himself upon the ground, and rubbing his back against the ground, destroyeth the Snakes; but when he feeth himself all over bloody, he runneth immediately to the water to wash himself: the hatred that is between a Serpent and the Hart, is not only while alive, but after he is dead; for a Serpent if he smell a Harts-horn burning, will get away from it; this is also to be observed concerning the Hart, that when the wind bloweth he alwayes runneth against it, because if he run with the wind it would carry the scent of him to the dogs. Thus we have finished what is very necessary to be spoken of the nature and properties of the Stag; I shall now speak to the several corollaries or inferences that may be drawn from the nature of it; there are many similitudes which the Holy Scripture fetcheth from the Stag, which I find mentioned very often in profane Authors; I shall content my felf out of many to collect some few, and among those many places in Scripture where we find mention made of this Creature, I think this which I shall here begin with, may be accounted the chiefof God compared to the Hind of the Morning; where observe, 1. He is not compared to the Hart, but to the Hind, because the Hind is the weaker Creature; thus we find, Cant. 5. 2. It is not, Gemellus mens, of male twinns, but Gemella, female twinns, because the love that Females have for Females, is greater greater then that which they bear to Males; as Galatinus telleth, lib. 3. chap. 30. Christ when he suffered made his power of no effect, as Ireneus telleth us; that is, saith he, he suffered, and spake not a word. 2. It is not unworthy our observation, to consider that which is added; the Morning Hind, cerva matutina, for the beatls do make a prey of the Hind in the Morning, as being then the weakest and most obnoxious to danger. 3. Hinds flesh is softer then that of the Stag, if it be hunted; thus the flesh of Christ which was soitned by those cruelties he endured, is thereby made food for us: Ein guter murber Braten, as the Germanes Say. 4. As the Hart hath fuch a harred against Serpent; thus Christ came into this World, that he might deltroy the Old Serpent, the Devil, that he might broise his head, deltroy his Kingdom and power; we read it promised, Gen. 3. 15. that the feed of the Woman shall break the Serpents boad. 4. And as the hatred that is between the Hart and the Serpent, is the same after death; thus (brift, now he is dead, and rifen again, and litteth at the right hand of God, is still destroying the Devils Kingdom, and doth by his breath, the preaching of the Golpel, ruine a d destroy him. 5. As the Stag, after he hath de-voured the Serpent, burneth within with a vehement drouth, which they do signific to others by that lamentable cry which they make, panting and howling as it were, untill they come to the Fountain; thus it was with Christ; we read that the Serpent should bite his heel, Gen. 3. 15. Christ when he came into the World to fave linners, to destroy the

the works of the Devil, he perceived the great weight of the wrath of God which then lay upon him, infomuch that in the Garden he sweat drops of blood, and when he was upon the Cross, he cryed out that he was a thirst, and with a bitter cry called upon God; saying, My God, my God, why bast thou for saken me? And when he had offered up supplications and prayers with strong crying and tears, gave up the Ghost; all which is fully and emphatically fet down by the Prophet David; all my bones are out of joynt, my heart is like wax, it is melted in the midst of my bowels, my strength is dryed like a potsherd, and my tongue cleavesh to my jams; I am poured out like water, Pial. 22. 6. As there are great flore of Serpents found in Lybia, which cannot endure the Seag; thus the Enemies are numerous that are against Christ and his Gospel; and as the Hart when he is belet with thefe Serpents, some of them winding about his neck, others about his feet, which he throwing himself upon the ground destroyeth, others he bruises, and after he hath cleared himself of them, immediately runneth to a River, partly to wash himself from the blood, and partly to wash away any venom that may be in the wounds; thus Christ endured the contradiction of finners, and by death overcame death, and conquered the Devil, and now enjoyeth Life Eternal; and hath left us efficacious remedies in his passion, which as often as we shall seriously consider of, and meditate upon, will be an infallible cure for any deadly wound, that the Devil by any hainous fin shall give unto us; the Church in the Canticles, Close.

Chap. 2. v. 9. speaking of Christ, faith, that he is like the Roe, or the young Hart; or as some will have the words to fignifie, a mild Goat; and they give us these reasons for it; as, 1. Because of his great swiftness and strength, in leaping over the Mountains, so that he seemeth rather to flye than leap; so Christ is said to come leaping over the Mountains, and skipping over the Hills; the word may also signifie Harts, for as Harts do sight one with another for the Hind; so doth Christ wage war with the Devil for the defence of the Church. 3. Many in Christ might be applyed to the Church, and to all good men as members of the same; thus all good men are compared to Harts, Pfal. 42. 1. The Hart panteth after the mater-brooks, so panteth my foul after thee, O God: We might draw several inferences from the nature of this beaft, and further shew wherein the good man and the Hart do agree; as, I.. The Hart is meek, and a very fociable Creature, loving the company of his fellows; thus the Church hath received from Christ the spirit of meekness. 2. As the Hart, when surrounded and beset with the Hounds, seeing no way to escape them, he will run to the Huntsman, rather then be made a prey to the Hounds; thus the Church in her greatest danger runneth for help to God, and like an humble supplicant acknowledgeth her transgressions, and confesseth that she hath deserved greater punishments. 3. As Harts and Goats when hunted run for refuge to high Mountains and Rocks; so Christians when any wayes distressed, look up to Heaven, from whence cometh their their Salvation; and as the Stag, when he perceiveth himself wounded with a dart, their only cure is Betony; thus Christians perceiving doubts to arife, can find comfort no where but in the Holy Scriptures; and as I faid before, some Harts have their Gall in their Tayls; fo ought all good men patiently and quietly to endure injuries done unto them; not prone to revenge, but labouring daily to bridle and restrain their unruly passions. 4. As there is a natural Antipathy and enmity between the Hart and the Serpent; thus the Church in all Ages hath alwayes had implacable Enemies, Tyrants, Hereticks, &c. And as when he is hunted, it groweth exceeding hot, and extreamly thirsteth for water; fo when good men are vexed and perfecuted by wicked men, they immediately betake themselves to the service of God, expecting there alone to find help and succour in all their extremities; and as when they swim over any River, they fo order themselves, that the head of one lyeth on the back of another; so we ought all to bear one anothers burthens; and as, although they have large Horns, yet they hurt no one, but are very timerous ; fo Christians ought not to trust in an Arm of flesh: St. Basil saith, that as Harrs by their breath do expell, and (as it were) draw out the poyfor from the Serpents hole; so good men, by their good coversation do often convert and reclaim men from their fins.

And as in the Cant. Christ and the Church are compared to two friends, in like manner the Harris an eminent instance and Symbol of love and friendship.

frieudship, concerning which we will not now speal any thing, having at large spoken to it in the for mer part of this Chapter.

And as oftentimes the Horns are of no use to the Hart; so neither do riches profit the owner, be cause as we often see the owner never liveth to en joy what he hath gotten; thus it often cometh to pass, that outward strength hath done a great dea of mischief, therefore it is alwayes good to trus in God for relief in all our miseries; we read, Psas 29. That the voyee of the Lord maketh the Hinds to Calve; which is as if he should say, that God wa even the midwife and Physician at the time of their bringing forth; some say that the Hart is very fear ful of Thunder, for when it Thundreth she neve bringeth forth her young alive, which God, in the fore-cited place, is said to prevent; he also break eth the Cedars of Lebanon; i. e. by his word he humbleth the high and lofty spirits of men, hei faid there to make the Hinds to Calve, i. e. he by his Gospel comforteth and supporteth all weak and despairing Christians; but having so largely spoken of this beaft, we shall say no more of it.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Hog.

Before we shall speak of the Nature of this Creature, we shall consider the difference between the Hog, the wild Boar, the tame Boar, the Pig, Sow, and the Porchpine, which some do think is rather a kind of Hedge-hog; as the Ape is likest to a man in his outward parts; so the Author of that little Anatomical exercise, (which Galen is supposed to have writ) saith that a Hog of all other Creatures is likest to a Man in his inward parts, whose sless likest to a Man in his inward parts, whose sless is likest to a Man in his inward parts, whose sless is likest to a mans sless, both in smell and taste, that (as Conradus Gesner saith) several have eaten the one for the other, not discovering of it by taste or smell; these things premised, I come now more particularly to speak of it.

1. It hath exceeding hard hairs, of a devouring gluttonous Nature, and therefore his head continually looketh towards the ground, and never can look upwards, and by his scent and continual smelling of the Earth, he findeth Roots, Bones, Carrion, Dung, and never resuseth any thing that he findeth.

2. It is hot and moist; and therefore it is that sometimes we see hard swellings grow about them; so that Butchers looking under their tongues, will tell whether a Hog be good or no. Those Hogs which

which are fed of rotten Apples, bean cods, and fuch moist meat, their flesh is moister and pleasanter than other meat, but not so healthful for the body : they have another way to know a Hog by looking on their backs, for they fee whether the blood be good or no that cometh out upon the plucking some hairs off by the roots; the way to have them clear from these swellings, is to let them run abroad, and keep them in clean slies; Butchers commonly say, that it is very seldom but that a Hog is troubled with some distemper or other, either in his Lungs, Lights, Liver, &c. but most especially they are troubled with Lice, which breed most upon their backs; but the head-ach is an epidemical disease among all Hogs, of which many dye. 3. It is so greedy a Creature, that he hath no measure in eating, and groweth fo fat, that fometimes he is not able to go; they have lain fo long in one place, that Mice have bred under them; Otto Melander faith, that in Arcadia he saw a Hog so fat that he could not stir, and that a Rat had eat a hole in his flesh, and there bred young ones; as Marcus Var-ro saith, quoting Johannes Rivius, in his Book concerning the institution of Children: this Creature liveth as if he were born for nothing but to eat; and, as there he observeth, the groffest bodies breed the worst blood; he hath nothing of subtilty or craft in him, but is a dull, stupid, sensless Creature, and can never be brought to any fervice, as are other Creatures, though wild; viz. Lyons, Bears, &c. and therefore Cicero faith, that the like of a Som is for nothing but to keep it from putrifying,

Putrifying, and as the Proverb, habet animam pro fale, their fouls are of no other use than to keep the body from stinking; pigs will suck any sow, and therefore they use to distinguish one from another by sticking pitch upon them. 4. They very much delight to be in the mud, which they doe not perceive the stench of, because they often breathe in the mud, and doe not take the scent up into their nose; he cannot endure the smel of a Rose or sweet Marjoram; and, as Varro faith, that tumbling and wallowing in the mud is as pleasant to the Swine as washing to a man; he loveth roots better then any thing, will eat fomething of whatever he findeth, he very greedily devoureth ferpents, and the dead carkass of any creature, nay he will eat the carkass of his fellow creature, which no other creature will doe. She is so impatient of hunger, that oftentimes the devoureth her young, and therefore it is no strange thing, as some have thought, for a Sow to devour her pigs. 5. It is no less fruitful then leacherous; for it is so exceeding enflamed with lust that they will fight one with another for the female; it hath almost the strength of a Lyon, for a Boar when hunted will not only throw. the Huntiman down, but if he hath no help will kill him. 6. The Somnever heddeth her hair in the winter time, as all other four-footed creatures doe. It is the particular property of the Boars who when he feeth unavoidable death, he fingleth out one of the Huntsmen and will run upon him, with the greatest rage imaginable, not to be affrighted with swords or sticks; it is worth observation vation, to consider that if one Hog be hurr, and he beginneth to grumble, all the rest of the Hogs of the same company come into him; it is needless to recite any thing more of this creature, it being fo commonly known: now let us fee what we may learn from the nature of it. I might give Examples of this creature, out of several prophane Authors; but I shall only set down one or two out of the Holy Scripture: the first place I shall speak to, shall be taken out of the Old Testament, in the 14. of Deut. v.3. where we find the Jews were for-bidden the eating of Swines flesh; some may en-quire the reason of this prohibition, since, accor-ding to the judgement of all Physitians, it may be reckoned one of the best sorts of meats, provided that it have no distemper upon it; nay they were not only forbidden the eating of it, but they were not so much as to touch the carkass of it after it was dead; the reasons of which among others may be thefe.

r. Lest the Vines and Olive trees in the fragrant Gardens should be rooted up by this venemous creature; for he will not eat the tops of herbs.

but pull them up by the roots.

2. To prevent the encrease and spreading of discases among them, who were alwayes very subject to the Leprosie; Swine being often troubled with hard swellings, which soon putriste, being not well fed. Conradus Gesner hath observed that white Hens are troubled with the same disease. But,

3. The next reason of their being torbidden Swines flesh may be, that by their abstinence they might

might give a testimony of their obedience to God, which would not have appeared in abitaining from those things which in their own nature were hurtful; but in abstaining from those things that were usefull and pleasant; for Swines flesh (as we faid before) is the likest to mans slesh. 4. La-Clantins telleth us a fourth cause, in his Book de vera sapientia. cap. 17. God forbid the Fews the eating of Swines flesh, (saith he) that thereby they might learn to keep themselves from all sins of uncleanness, for Swines are filthy and unclean creatures: never so much as once looking up unto heaven, but alwayes rooting in the earth continually seeking for food; and no creature is of so little use as they are, for every creature is either good for drawing, for tilling the ground, for easing of burthens, or else they serve to clothe us, or give us milk, or last of all, are for a safeguord unto us: fothat no creature but is of some use or other to man. God therefore forbids them to eat Swines flesh which was fed only to live. He would have them take heed, from this coenture, of being gluttons, which would very much hinder the free exercise of justice among st them, as also that they (hould not plunge themselves in filthy lusts as the Sow doth in the mire, and that they should not be subject to, nor clog themselves with earthly pleusures; for they are besmeared with mud or clay, that make riches their God; thus far Latantius. The Sow never looks up to heaven but when he grunteth, and then it is only with his eyes life up; he will be much under trees, loving exceedingly to feed upon Acorns, but never looketh up to the Oak from whence they fall; thus wicked covetous men, though they enjoy all this worlds good, never look up to God who is the tree of life, who is the Authour and Giver of them. Physitians fay, that those who have small foreheads have no more learning in them than a Hog; and that they who have a thick nose and flat at the end, are foolish; and if they have a thick neck, then they are cholerick: all Authors compare those men that are given to lust to Swine; thus Christ, Mat. 7.6. Forbiddeth us to cast Pearls before Dogs and Swine, not to dogs, i. e. to sturious persecutors; not to Swine, i. e. to unclean persons, who contrary to their consciences wallow in their sins, and that men should not be deterred from preaching the Gospel by the ingratitude of their hearers, Christ commandeth them to preach to those who are more willing and obedient; thus we find Epicures and Drunkards are compared to Swine. 2 Pet. 2. 22. for first, as the Hog is a most dull stupid creature, having not so much reason as to distinguish good from bad; nor can he be made fit for any service; thus wicked men will not understand the things of God, not being at all moved at any Sermon, but doe despise even wisdom it self. The same Christ telleth us, in another place, that the cares of this world is one great hinderance of our profiting by the word. 2. Swine are led only by their appetite, alwayes living an intemperate gluttonous life, Jeremiah, cap. 12. 3. faith, that wicked men who flourish in this life, and enjoy all the world can afford them, are fatted for the slanghter: and as Swine doe devour any thing that cometh next to their

their mouth, (for dish-water is a very pleasant drink to them) thus wicked covetous men use all meanes, both right and wrong to obtain their covetous delires; sometimes we pull out some of their teeth to prevent mischief; thus wicked men are kept from doing that mischief which otherwise they would doe, for fear of the Laws. 3. As Swine cannot distinguish between Pearls and Carrion, but trample upon them both, so sinners doe not see any difference between earthly and heavenly things. Nay, they contemn the latter, and only feek for earthly things; and as they cannot endure the fcent of roses and sweet Marjoram; so cannot wicked men endure that breath of life which is breathed out of the Holy Scripture. Swine doe not onely delight in dung, but they count the fmel of carrion a sweet scent. Thus wicked men count all their fins vertues; so it is common among us now, not to count drunkenness any sin, but a vertue; so of other vices; and as the Sow after her washing will turn to the mire again, so wicked men, after a feigned repentance, will turn again to their former wicked life; and also, as this creature defileth any thing which he toucheth with his smout, thus doe wicked men by their evil lives; and as we commonly fee the Sow teacheth the young Pigs betimes to wallow in the mire, fo wicked men begin betimes to teach their children to doe wickedly; if one Hog be hurt, all the rest of the company will run to help him; so if the Minister accuseth one wicked man of his sins, all his company will run to help him. But we may learn K 3 fome fome good instructions from the nature of the Sow in this particular, in which she sheweth a tender nature and a great love to her fellows; thus ought Christians to be pitiful & tender-hearted to their fellow creatures when under any misery or affliction; but more particularly we may compare the Hog and the covetous man together; for as the Hog doth nothing all his life long but eat and seek for food; thus is it the whole business of the covetous mans life to heap up riches, and to encrease his wealth.

2. As the Hog is never fatisfied with what he eates, so are the defires of the covetous never to be fatisfied with riches.

3. As the Hog is of no use nor service to any one while alive; so it is with the coverous man, who never doth any good with what he hath while alive.

4. As Swines when very hungry and cannot get any thing to eat, doe not spare their young piggs, but greedily devour them; thus covetous men will have their greedy desires satisfied, and spare neither friends nor relations, but are for what they can get of either.

his stye presently beginneth to gruntle, fearing that some body is coming to take his life away; thu are coverous men afraid of every one, lest they should rob him of his pelf.

6. As the Hog is continually grunting all the while he is at the trough, eating in fear left any should take it away from him; thus covetous men

A Description of living Creatures. 135 doe not enjoy what they have, but are in fear left by any accident they should lose what they have.

7. As the Hog will foon forget the misery of his fellow, though at the hearing of him cry many of them will run to help him; thus it is with the covetous men, who have no true affection to their friends and relations, but when felf-interest is at the bottom of it.

8, As the Hog maketh a great noise and loud cries when he is going to be killed; thus are covetous men as fearfull of death.

9. As when Swine are killed, there are puddings and faufages fent about to friends and neighbours, which are eaten with a great deal of joy; thus do wicked heires daily expect and defire the death of the covetous miser, and then with joy they divide what with care and pains he had gathered together.

As Swine never shed their hairs in the winter time, thus it is with the wicked, who never leave off their wicked wayes; and as the Sow after her washing, returns again to her wallowing in the mire; thus doe wicked men after a feigned repentance return again to their former wicked courses; and as Swine doe not make any noise towards heaven; thus wicked men while in peace and prosperity never seek God; but when under afflictions and troubles, Pfal. 80. 14.

10. To conclude, the enemies of the Church are compared to wild Boares destroying the Vineyards, who will often whet and sharpen their teeth, ru-thing upon the Huntsman with so great violence that it is very hard for him to escape with his life; thus with no less rage and violence doe the ene-mies of the Church act against her. Xenophon, Opianus, Pollux, and several other writers do tell us, that it is of so fiery a nature, that when for weariness he is forced to lye down upon the ground, his teeth are so inflamed and his whole mouth, that if you take a hair from his neck, and put it into his mouth, it will fet it on fire; the enemies of Christ are as fierce against his Church, as the Boar is against the Huntsman; an example of this we have, in our modern story, who have sworn for themfelves and their posterity the ruine who have and destruction of all Lutherans; and as the Boar (which may not unproperly be called a kind of Swine) until the hath voided her ruine, cannot fly the enemy, but will fland still and be taken; thus the enemies of the Church, unless they doe leave and for fake their fins, cannot avoid the wrath of God; and as the Boar, when ill, cureth himself thy the Ivy-tree; thus there is no remedy for the cure of finners but the word of God; and as the Boar if inraged will for madness run into his ftye; thus many men, in a passion, will say and doe that which at last proveth their own ruine: we reade in St. Matthews Gospel, of the Devills that befought Christ, if he cast them out that they might enter into the herd of Swine, Christ gave them leave to goe, the Devil was very willing to enter into the herd; from whence we may learn thus much, that the Devil dwelleth in those persons, who like Hogs and Swine delight to continue in their fins and iniquities; and as the Gadarens defired Christ to depart out of their Coasts, lest they should lose any more Hogs; thus it is with wicked men, who rather then they will lose the enjoyment of a base filthy lust, will let Christ, God and Heaven, and all go. Thus much of the Hog.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Fox.

THE Fox is a creature commonly known to all, and therefore I shall not be very large in speaking of it; only I shall say something to those several places of Scripture, where we find this creature made mention of : there are three things which I observe in the Fox; it is a very crafty and fubtle, and it is a cruel and gluttonous Creature.

Ambrosius (in his Hexameron) saith, that the Fox is to be hated for his greediness, and that he is despised for his weakness, and that while he is laying waite for another, he doth not take care enough of himself. I find that Foxes and Weasels may be faid to be equally cunning, especially Ferrets and white Weafels; there is also a sea-fish called a Fox, which I think doth not come far short of this Creature we are now speaking to, for subtilty and craftiness; that the Fox is so, appears from those Fables which are extant concerning him, by which his craftinels, &c. is lignified to us; but we shall shall have occasion to speak of this at large hereafter: that he is malicious and revengeful appears, in that all his craftiness, &c. is only imployed to the destruction of other Creatures; and his gluttony appears in that he is continually feeking for his prey, never being fatisfied; which three odious properties are applyed to Hypocrites, Lik 9.58. and that chiefly to Herod, Luk- 13. 32. Go and tell that Fox, &c.

The Fox therefore, as we faid before, is very crafty; which will appear,

1. In that he claps his tail between his legs

when he is purfued,

2. He hath a very large hairy tail, insomuch that the dogs pursuing of him catch hold of his tail;& thinking to catch hold of him, instead of flesh, get nothing but their mouthes full of hair, by which means they lose their hold of him.

3. When he perceiveth he cannot escape he urin's on his tayl and whisks it on the dogs, which hath an exceeding frong scent, insomuch that the dogs not enduring the scent are for a while forced to delift.

4. He often when he is in danger, and no avoiding of it, he will bite the dogs on their hinder legs, for that is the tenderest part about them.

5. Because the Urchine is too strong for him, he taketh him by craft; for when he casteth himfelf down upon the ground, he leapeth upon his belly and destroyeth him.

6. The Fox hath a way to take fish; wandring by the shoar, he dippeth his tayl in the water; the little little fish immediately entangle themselves in his tayl, and so are taken.

7. He his often troubled with wasps in the summer time, but useth this wile to destroy them; he hideth himself, but layeth his taylout; the Wasps sty to his tayl, and when there are abundance in it, he runneth to the wall or to some tree, and there striketh his tayl against the tree, and subbeth it against the ground, and so he destroyeth all of them.

8. If he wanteth any food and cannot tell where to get it, he lyeth upon the ground upon his back with his legs stretched abroad, and so feigneth himself dead; the Birdes seeing him lye so light on him, thinking he is dead; & when they are upon him he taketh them, and devoureth them.

9. He hideth himself privately when he knoweth there are Hens, Geese or Ducks, and so destroyeth them in the night time; he will be often sucking the milk Pailes where he can find them; sometimes he taketh a Hare by his trapps which he layeth for him. The Fox will eat Mice, and hens, after he hath killed them, but before he will not meddle with it. He is a destroyer of Peacocks, Doves, and almost all Birdes, as also of Hares; and therefore there are but sew Hares where there are many Foxes; it is a known Fable of the Fox, the Geese, and Hens.

10. He will never eat if any one feeth him, but alwayes feeds by himself in his hole.

fraight forwards, but in several paths and turnings, and therefore he is called Vulpes quasi Volvi-

12. He goeth as if he were lame, for his right

13. He is a greater devourer of tame, than of wild Creatures.

14. His breath is very strong, and his urine is no less unpleasant than his breath; and if he bites any one it is venemous; it is observed, that those places where they are are very barren; the reason of which some think may be, that rank and unpleasant smell which cometh from his body; so that, according to the Proverb, he stinks and Grore.

15. When he wants food he will be very tame, & keep about houses, and in the night time, if he can get any thing he takes it, and runs with it into the woods, and his hole or den hath six or seven wayes to it, lest any one should trayle him.

16. There is a kind of mutual love between the Fox and the Serpent; for both of them love to be in holes and Caves; but though Foxes have holes, yet they be not of their own making; for those holes which the Badgers make for themselves, they by craft cousen them of by this stratagem; when he seeth any of their holes empty, he immediately dungs just at the mouth of the hole; when the Badger returns he not enduring such a rank smell is forced to leave his hole; the several wayes which lead to his hole are a great distance one from another; for were they near one another, if the Huntsman laid a gin at one place, let him come out where he would the dogs would see him. We find that Christ spoke of the holes of Foxes, Mat. 8. 18. Lak, 9. 58. The Foxes have holes, and the Birdes of the air have nests, &c. Serpents, Apes, and Foxes, and all fuch like mischievous creatures. are observed to have very smal eyes; but the more innocent creatures, such as Sheep, Oxen, &c. have very large eyes; the Crow and the Fox are often feen to be together. There is a Bird called the Offalus, which is a great destroyer of Foxes, for he will light upon the Fox and pull the haires off his back, and if he knoweth where his young ones are, will kill them all; and therefore the Fox is feldom found big; and when the hath brought forth her young, the hiderh them where no one can find them; when the is old it is a hard matter to take her in a net, neither will she be deceived by taking any thing that you shall throw unto her.

17, The Fox feedeth upon dead carkasses; we find David cursing his enemies who had sought for his soul, those that seek 'my soul to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth, they shall fall by the sword, they shall be a portion for Foxes. Ps. 63.9, 10. Origen understandeth by the Fox the Devil, parts of whom are all wicked men; yet we may very well by it understand temporal punishment for wicked men; offenders & malesactors are here destroy'd by the sword, & their carkasses cast to the beasts of the field, that story will very well come in here, that Pausania as relateth in his History of Messen, a little City in Peloponese in Greece; which is of one Aristomenes Messenius, who was taken by the Lacedemonians, and condemned to dye; and after the Custom of those people he was thrown into a very deep Cave and there to starve, where many malefactors before him had been thrown, and died with hunger; he lying there very fad, and expe-Ging a lingring death, he faw a Fox coming privily and very flowly to devour a Carcass which lay by him; he feeing that covereth his face with the garment that he had about him; and fo lay for dead; the Fox at last perceiving him lie so, thinking that he had been dead, fetteth upon him, and immediately catcheth at his garment to teare it off from him, the better to come to his carkass! the man with one hand catcheth hold of the Fox, and with the other hand keepeth on his clothes that the Few should not bite him; the Fox striving to get away, the man keeping his hold, followeth him from one hole to another, until he came to a little hole where he saw light; he let the Fox goe, broke his way through and escaped; but when this was told to the Lacedemonians, that Aristomenes was escaped and alive among his friends, they thought it as great a miracle, as if he had arose from the dead. Pling telleth us, that if they chance to eat bitter Almonds it is death to them except they can get water; in Thracia if he goeth over any ice; he will first lay his ear to it, if he hear the current of the water underneath he will not venture over, fearing lest it be too weak to bear him; it a Fox runneth mad he hath the same qualities as a mad dog: but we have spoken enough of the nature and properties of the creature. Authors have deduced many and uleful inferences from

A Description of living Creatures. 143 from it; I shall for brevity sake only tell the reader thus much, that the craftiness and subtilty of the Fox, is an evident fymbole and example of that craft and deceit which is in the Devil and all his agents; which how great it is in transforming himfelt into an Angel of light, will be better altogether omitted, then briefly to speak of, as the O-rator once said of Carthage: with what fraudu-lent expressions did he deceive our first Parents? with what subtilty did he tempt Christ himself? and how many cheats doth he put upon men dayly, but chiefly those that think themselves most secure? how easily doth he deceive Witches and Inchanters? he telleth them how to bring a flood, how to make thunder, and he destroyeth these; nay he is not contented with this peither, but at their death he being not able to give that help which he promised, destroyeth both body and soul; Sampson is faid, Judg. 15. 4. 10 get 300. Foxes, and to tye them together with firebrands at their tailes, and so fent them into his enemies corn; some doubt how it could be done; for first, Sampson could not get so many; and secondly, although he might get them, yet he could not tye firebrands to their tails; to both which I answer, that about the Caspian Sea there are so many Foxes, as Alian reporteth, that they will come into Towns and Cities in great companies, but doe no one any hurt, fawning upon every body; and as amongst us we have so many Goats, that they will often get into the Vineyards and pull down the Vines; So in Judaa, in old times, they were as much troubled with Foxes, ac. appeareth, Cant. 2. 15. Take us the Foxes, the little Foxesthat spoyl the Vines, for our Vines have tender grapes.

To the second objection, I answer, that we have many like examples in prophane Authors; thus we read in Ovid. lib. 4. Fastorum, of several Foxes that have been sent amongst corn with sirebrands at their tails.

Cur igitur missa junctis ardentia tadis terga ferant vulpes, causa docenda mihi est.

And a little further, you may read,

Is capit extremi vulpem in convalle falilti, abstulerat multas illa cohortis aves.
Captivam st ipula fonoque involvit & ignes, admovet urentes effugit illa manus.
Qua fugit incendit vestitos messibus agrosadamnosis vites ignibus aura dabat.
Fastum abiit, monumenta manent, nam dicere cernunc quoque lex vulpem carseolana vetat (tam Utque luat pomas genus hoc Cerealibus ardet quoque modo segetes perdidit, ille perit.

But enough of this; we will now return to the story of Sampsen, who may signifie to us a true teacher or Doctor who is set, whose work and business is to see it that it flourishesh; but we may compare the Foxes unto Hereticks who are tyed together by their tailes, i.e. they consent and agree to destroy and ruine the Church; but their heads are

A Description of living Creatures. 145 distant one from another, i. e. they differ in judge-distant one from another, i. e. they differ in judge-ment and opinion; notwithstanding all makes for the ruine of the Church, Sampsen therefore gathereth the Foxes together, i.e. to shew that they are all agreed to trouble the Church, Neh. 4. 8. We read, that when the Jews returned from Captivity, and began again to build the Temple, and the Heathens their Enemies hearing of it, said, Eventhat which they build, if a Fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall; Thus, as the Enemies of the Tews thought, that the wall which they built was so weak, that they might easily be laid walte, even by Foxes, &c. Thus the Enemies of the Church, if they see that our Santtum Sanctorum is likely to be built, i.e. that by the preaching of the Gospel many shall be converred; they think it an easie matter by subtil disputations to overthrow and ruine; this we fee hapned in the primitive Church, which appears by those many and long disputations which we see the Fathers had with the Philosophers of those

Take us the little Foxes which spoyl the Vines, Cant. 2. 15. false Prophets and Hereticks are compared to Foxes, Ezek. 13. 4. O Israel, thy Prophets are like the Foxes in the Defarts; that is a remarkable place in the Canticles, of the little Foxes that spoyled the Vines; Origen by the Foxes understandeth Devils; for as Foxes are fed with clusters of Grapes, that is, they spoyle the Vines while young, and their tender branches but just grown out: thus the Devil hideth himself in Dens, but on purpose to entrap young Christians, and with evil thoughts to extinguish the flower of virtues as foon as budded, and but beginning to appear, but especially in young men, when they have but just begun to lead an honest life: I could by many examples shew how young men are in love with vice, as Drunkenness, filthy and obscene songs, immodest pictures, &c. so that it was too truly said by some of the Fathers, that the youthful age of most is facrificed to the Devil, the best part of most men are spent in the worst things; no one can take this little young Fox but Christ, therefore we ought earnestly to implore him, that he would govern and enlighten our youth by his Holy Spirit; the best time to take this Fox is while young, we ought betimes to stop the first beginnings of vice, before they become a habit; as we use to say, principiis obsta.

For in the forecited place of the Camicles it is faid, that these Foxes live to be taken when the Winter is past, and the showers are over, when the voice of the Tartle is heard, &c. Hence some of the Holy Fathers understand by these little Foxes, Hereticks that lay waste and destroy the Vineyard, that is the Church; and as in that place there is no mention made of Lions, Tygers, Lopards, Bears, &c. because the Church never receiveth such hurt from open Enemies, though they shed much blood, but rather by such perfecutions it is the more increased, and groweth the better, according to those Verses, 1 certains

Sanguine succrevit Ecclesia, sanguine cœpit, Sanguine fundata est, sanguinis sinis erit.

As those little Foxes which Iye hid under ground do most mischief to the Vines, thus the greatest Enemies of the Church lye in her very bosome, for the Church in all ages hath been like Joseph; fold by her own Brethren, and like Sampson betrayed by his own Wife; thus Christ was betrayed into the hands of his Enemies by his own Disciples; thus the Church chiefly suffereth by those men that are maintained by her, as Joseph preserved the life of his Brethren that destroyed him; and no less doth it suffer from those men whom it defendeth, and who know all her fecrets; fo Judas knew the Garden where Christ was wont to pray. And as Foxes by their craftiness do great mischief to Vines and Gardens, so the Church never suffereth more than from subtilty of arguments, by which young men are easily deceived, not being able to perceive the fallacy of them; We might illustrate this by the example of several Hereticks in all ages, who have used all wiles and stratagems to deceive; and as Foxes have several waies to their holes, so do wicked men turn and wind themselves alwaies to deceive; and as the Fox, if he be neceslitated to it by hunger, will feem to be tame, fo do these deceivers feem to imitate the true Church; an eminent instance of this we have in Ecclesiastical History, of Arrivs, who seemed to be one of the true Church, and egreed with all Orthodox L 2 men', men, and faid that he would subscribe to the Nicene Creed, & the rest of the Decrees of that Councel, using these words, What I have subscribed, I give my consent to, but under his doublet he had a paper wherein was written another thing; but these Foxes are to be taken, they are to be confuted with strong arguments, and that while they are young, before their opinions get too big a head, before they have cast their urine and dung about, before their breath becometh rank, and their teeth venomous; that is, before they have by their false do-Arine poyloned and infected mens judgements: they make those places barren where they are, i.e. they lay waste the Church; and as the Foxes have a kind of friendship with the Crow and Serpent, thus have Hereticks a correspondency and a great love for the Devil and his Agents; it is worthy our ob-fervation to confider how Ministers are compared to the Hunters of Foxes, who must be crafty and industrious to find them out; the little Foxes are only to be taken, for none can take the great one but the Son of God, who is described in the forecited place of the Canticles: the Germanes have this Proverb, Eines Haas une inchs sein, he that is once overcome by an Enemie, shall never be at quiet: they have another Proverb to the same purpose almost, which is this, Ber einen inchs fangen wil, der mus einen schops hinder das Garn Stellen, it is a difficult thing to find out an Army that lyeth in ambush; with which Proverb we shall conclude our Discourse of the Fox.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Cat.

TN former times Cats were not so tame as to live I in Houses, and be familiar with us as they are now; for they used formerly to live only in Woods, and were exceeding cruel and venomous, making a prey of Foxes and Rabbets, &c. but yet doubtless their nature was the same then as it is now; for God at the first creation gave every creature those properties which afterwards it retained; but yet I do not deny, but that about Helvetia there are wild Cats now, and, as Conradus Gefner faith, are very good food; the Cat in former times was one of the Agyptian Gods, as Diodorus Siculus telletin us, and Strabe in his 27 th. Book faith, that in the Reign of Tiberius there were above 7000 Romans flain in Egypt for the killing of one Cat; but we will let this pass: a Cat is not much unlike a Lion in his face, teeth, and claws, but his ears are somewhat rounders the wild Cats most commonly are grey, and are almost of the colour of ice; the tame Cat is of divers colours, but most commonly are grey; Cats eyes shine in a dark night, they can fee to get mice in the darkest night; thus the Hyena and the Batt have their fight the strongest when it is dark, their eyes are observed to be bigger and leffer according to the change of the Moon:

150 The History of Brutes, or,

Moon; if he feeth a mouse run by him, he will run after him whatever he is doing of, and thence came the Proverb, the Bride Cat, which Gregory Nazianzen expoundeth thus, that if a Cat be adorned like a Bridegroom with rich attire, if he feeth a mouse stir, though a Bride for attire, yet she runneth after it, never minding her attire; thus are all spurious and false Ministers; and he compareth them to some Gentlemen that have been given to lewd courses, but afterwards have undertaken the office of the Ministry, and yet continue the same as they were before. 2. Ælian, Lib. 7. Cap. 40. faith, that the Male Cat is the leacherousest creature that is, but the female not so bad, and very tender of her young ones; when the Male is thus inflamed with luft, she leaveth the House, and wandereth up and down; the Male being so leacherous, killeth all the young ones, that he may enjoy the female the fooner; the male at that time is exceeding fierce, and oftentimes do wound one another in the night time, where we commonly hear them make fuch noises; but some do say that the male is not more luftful than the female, but that they are both alike, nay sometimes the female will fight for the male. 3. A young Cat is very nimble, climbing over Houses, and up into Trees, and if he feeth any thing to move upon the ground, he will leap upon it, he will play with any that he meereth with; but when old, then he is as dell and lazie; Julius Cesar Scaliger faith, that in Malabar there are some Cats so nimble, that they will run as nimbly as a Squirrel. 4. He is exceedingly cleanly, he will often be licking of himielf, not induring any bad fcent, and therefore maketh a hole with her feet, and hideth her own excrements in the earth. Pliny telleth us the reafor of it is, that she might not discover to the mice where she is. 5. At night she will run into the darkest corners of the House, having a very sharp and acute light, and can better fee in the night time than in the day; very intemperate in her diet, and often is diffempered by over-much eating, and therefore feldome liveth long; she loveth to lye near ovens, and in the chimney-corner, and often burneth herself, she will alwaies Iye clean and soft, & will not leave the house that she hath long lived though the house be left alone; not like the Dog, that loveth the people, and not the house; the breath of a Cat is very unwholfome, and the smell of his urine is very strong, and therefore we use to say, that a Cat alwaies leaveth a stink behind him; he is naturally very hot, his skin is very warm, he being alwaies so hot, hath a bad scent about him; some cannot endure the breath of a Cat, and will smell it though they do not see him, and will sweat untill he be removed out of the room, because the Mother, when big of that child, could not endure a Cat her felf; the Cat will light on his feet though he falleth a great height, and feldome is hurt by any fall; if his skin be burned any where, he will not stir out of doors, but other times will go about to shew himself: his breath is exceeding strong and unwholsome (as we said before) and therefore those that let them Ive with them in bed are seldome free from diseases; he is a great enemie to serpents and toads; in time of sickness he will carry the contagion about him; he hateth no creature more than mice, and will easily find them out by their smell, and will see them when they do not fee him; and oftentimes when he hath got one, first he will play with it, and afterwards devour it: thus do they ferve birds; he loveth fish, but cannot endure the water, and these are the most noted things that we shall obferve of the Cat; and I know none that more refemble the Cat than Flatterers: For, 1. As it is a common creature, so there is no place free now from Slanderers and Back-biters. 2. As they creep into all corners and holes, thus do Tale-bearers prye and fearch into all mens actions; and as they themselves do not perceive the strong smell that cometh from them, thus Back-biters aggravate other mens faults, but hide their own, and as the Cat loveth to be handled and stroked on the head, thus Flatterers love those that will give eare to their reports: as in the old time it was one of the Egyptian gods, fo Back-biters and Flatterers are by too many people honoured and loved; they, like the Cat, whereever they come, leave a strong scent behind them, and by the just judgement of God are often discovered.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the Hare and Coney.

He Hare is generally known, and is very I swift, and therefore some give the Etymologie of the word Lepus from levi-pes; he hath a very light round head, his ears are long, and but of a small body, he never groweth fat, and never goeth, but alwaies leapeth; his hair is as fost as feathers; but the Fox hath a way to take him although he be so swift; when the Fox pursueth him, when he hath run after him a great way, he seemeth to give over pursuing him; the Hare perceiving of it, goeth on but very leafurely, the Fox perceiving that, followeth him to his Burrough; the Hare can go up a Hill easier than he can go down, he is easier taken in a Valley than on a Hill; when he goeth down a Hill, he never goeth straight forward, but windeth about; for his hinder feet being longer than his fore-feet, it is troublesome for him to go down hill: his feet are very hairy, and cannot eafily be hurt with running. I. He is very timerous, as are all other creatures that have such great hearts; (he is frighted at the shaking of a leafe) those creatures that are strong, as the Bull and Dog, have a lowd cry, but the Hart and Hare have a very small cry: the Hare exceedingly feareth the Eagle, and is no less fearful of the snares of the Fox; there is no virtue in the Hare worth commendation; but instead of this, Nature to recompence them (as the Heathen Philosophers fay) hath given them very long ears, that they might the better perceive dangers approaching; and as foon as he feareth any danger, he flyeth fo swiftly, that sometimes in the midit of his flight he dieth; he is so fearful, that oftentimes to avoid one danger, he runneth into another; when he is pursued he runneth into his hole: It is reported of a Hare, that being hunted very hard, he ran into the Sea, and there was killed by the Sea-dog; no one would hunt a Hare with a Snail, according to the Dutch Proverb. It is a further argument of the timeroufness of the Hare, that she shunneth those places that passengers come through, but loveth woods and hedges; Lyfander did well when he commanded his men to be of good courage when they lay before Corinth, because he saw a Hare running upon the walls; for, faith he, it cannot be that the Hare would be there, if they had ever used any military exercise upon them; and possibly from hence came that saying, that it is a bad sign for a Hare to cross us in the way; for it signifieth that those places are very lonesome, and that few people frequent them, and so the more dangerous. 3. It hath a very weak and infirm sight, he sleepeth not as other creatures do with his eyes shut, and therefore of old, to live the life of a Hare, was as much as to say, you are in perpetual fear. 4. It is exceeding fruitful, and of all other creatures, this only after the hath brought forth her young, cona Description of living Creatures. 155 ceiveth another; she bringeth forth young, and ceiveth another; she bringeth forth young, and yet continually is with young; whence Herodotus well observeth, that God hath so ordered it, that those creatures which are useful and beneficial unto mankind, should exceedingly increase; but on the other side, those things that are ravenous and mischievous, such as are Lions, Bears, and Wolves, should not increase so much; in old time it was thought, that those that eat much Hares sless, it made them very fair, as Martial saith, and that it did in seven daies time, because it is a kind of a melancholy sless, and good blood; Martial therefore maketh the Hare to be the best of all four-footed creatures;

Inter aves Turdus, si quis me judice certet; Inter quadrupedes gloria prima Lepus.

Take it in English thus,

The Thrush above all Birds that are; And of four-footed Beasts, the Hare.

That a Hare should make one beautiful, I know no reason can be given. 5. It is exceeding leacherous, but mostly in January, when if she be hindred from the male, she will devour those young ones which she had brought forth not long before.

6. She may in some respects be said to be crast; for in the Winter time she is alwaies in plowed fields, but in Harvest time she hideth her self in Vineyards, and after Harvest, when the Grapes begin to grow ripe, she leaveth the Vineyards; when she goeth to seek her food, she alwaies goeth and cometh the same way, but not in a straight line, but in several turnings and windings; she seldome goeth amongst the thorns, lest it should tear her hair; for the dogs by the scent of her hair would foon discover her: when she bringeth forth her young, she hideth them up and down in several places, and of all enemies she feareth the Hawk most, and continually when hunted windeth up and down, and so deceiveth the dogs; we do not hunt the Hare for any hurt it doth us, but as we use to fay, the Hare is hunted for her flesh, from whence came the Proverb, As safe as a Hare, spoken of one who had riches, &c. for which only he was vexed and troubled by others: Neither is the Hare of an uncertain Sex, sometimes male and sometimes female, as some have fallly imagined, but it is alwaies the fame.

The Coney is not much unlike the Hare, something less, but much stronger, alwaies being under the earth, and makes her burroughs sometimes under mountains, as Martial faith:

Gaudet in effossis habitare Cuniculus Antris, Monstravit faciles hostibus ille Vins.

The Psalmist seems to speak almost the same, Psal. 10. 18. The Coney where ever she makes her burrough, the levels the ground again, lest it should be discovered; at mornings and evenings she constantly stantly cometh out of her burrough, and there she fits at the entrance of it, to fee if there be any approaching danger; and if at any time she be closely pursued, and hath no way to escape, she immediately runs into her burrough, out of which there is no way to get her, but by fending a Ferret after her; for there is nothing which the Rabbet hateth more than the Ferret; there is such plenty of them in some parts of Spain, that oftentimes they have destroyed the Harvest: Nay, we read of the Island called Carpathia, that the Inhabitants were once destroyed by them; and Marcus Varro (quoted by Pliny) saith, that there was a City in Spain undermined by Coneys: but what we faid before concerning the Hare, that it might be compared to timerous and cowardly men, we may say the like concerning the Coney; the Fable of the Hares and the Lion is known, how that the Hares would have given Laws to the Lion, who afterwards were destroyed by him; which may fignifie thus much to us, that oftentimes mild and timerous Princes do rule and govern a fierce and war-like people, by whom their Kingdome is fometimes overthrown; or else it may signifie those men who are afraid to tell men of their faults: the Germans have a Froverb, Ber hasen Spurng, i. e. The anckle of an Hare, meaning any thing that men trust to, or relye upon; for the Anckle-bone in the Hare is that without which she could not leap; but by the way we shall speak to Prov. 30. Verf. 21. 25, 26. there are four things which are upon the earth, but are exceeding wife; the Auts are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the Sam. mer; the Coneys are but a feeble folk, yet make they their bruses in the Rocks; the Locusts have no King, yet go they forth all of them by Bands; the Spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in Kings Palaces; by all which this wife King lignifyeth to us, the great inadvertency and perverienels of mankind, who of all creatures is only able to confider his waies, and knoweth his own greatness and Arength, and yet daily runneth into dangers : thele four forts of little creatures that Solomon spake of in the forecited place, though small, yet know their own weakness, and therefore chuse alwaies thole places where they may be most secure; and will not go into any place where there may be a possibility of danger: the Ants begin betimes to lay up food for Winter: the Hare being timerous, doth not love to be in those places where any one cometh: the Locust being weak, liveth quietly, and doth not go where any one is in the place, knowing that it cannot so well avoid dangers: the Spider is alwaies exercifing her curious art; therefore this is to be wifer than the wifest. 1. To know our own strength, and our own weakness. 2. To undertake nothing above our strength, but on the contrary, not to indulge our selves in sloth and idleness; and because there is some small difficulty in it wholly to let it alone; we know there are many mischiefs and distempers accompany drunkennels, and that idlenels and wars, is not without its inconveniences, yet few do endeavour to shun the one or the other: the Hare being weak, goeth not much abroad; the Ant because poor, laboureth the more; Plutarch saith, that there is no small escature so like a great one, as is the Hare and the Ass, in his eyes, colour, ears, and sless; and he saith surther, in Lib. 4. Symp, the last question, the Jews were therefore forbidden to eat the Hare, because so like an Ass; Leviticus 11.5.

It is said, the Coney, because he cheweth the cud, and divideth not the hoof, he is unclean unto you; so Dent.
14.7. by which prohibition they were most especially to learn, chiefly to avoid the qualities of the Hare; when Xerxes brought his numerous Army against the Grecians, (as Herodotus relateth) a Mare brought forth a Hare, that signified to Xerxes that he should not prosper in his undertakings, which also hapned.

CHAP. XX.

Of the Wolf.

This creature is known to most, he is much like unto a Dog, but for sierceness like a Lion, only this difference, that he hath them not in the same degree, but as Albertus saith, more mischievous and crasty; his chief properties particular to him, are strength, swiftness, fierceness, and a natural hatred to sheep; he hath no qualities that do deserve any commendation. 1. What sever he teareth with his claw, dieth. 2. His greediness and cruelty appeareth in this, when he goeth to feek his prey, he whetteth and sharpneth his teeth with the Herb Origanum; he can endure hunger for a long time together, but afterwards he will eat very greedily, and fometimes too much, but he speedily digesteth what he so greedily devoureth; the reason of which quick digestion may be the great heat of his body, he being naturally of a very hot temper; the female constantly supplyeth her young ones with food, the male knoweth this, and therefore the female is fain to hide her prey from him; and as foon as fhe hath taken her prey washe:h her mouth, left by her bloody mouth the should be discovered; but yet when the he-wolf hath been out, and can take no prey, he forceth her to give him the prey that she took for herself; his cruelty appeareth further in this, that he loveth nothing more than blood. 2. His craftiness is more than his cruelty; for those beasts which have horns, she cometh upon them, and beginneth at their tail, lest by his horns he might be too hard for him; he often filleth his belly with earth, which maketh him more ponderous, and not so easily to be destroyed: he alwaies observeth this, never to go for his prey but in the night, or early in the morning, a little before day, that so he might not be seen by man or beaft, by which means he also avoideth all fnares and ginns that are laid for him : his eyes shine in the night, and do as it were sparkle in the dark; his light is very strong, seeing very exactly in the darkest night. 3. He hath a great hatred to man, which appeareth in this; if a Wolf feeth a man first, he is not able to speak; and on the other fide, if a man first espyeth a Wolf, immediately he becometh tame, and hath nothing of fierceness or cruelty in him; the reason of which some have enquired into, who tell us it proceedeth from the hot, fiery spirit of the Wolf; that, they tell us, enters into the man; how true it is I know not, but Camerarius telleth us it is altogether fabulous, in his Succis. Cap. 23. vid. Scalig. de Subtilitate, ad Card. 344. Exercit, Selt. I. Camerarius, in the forecited place faith, That a Wolf hath not fuch a fear of wood and iron as of stone, which appeareth in this, that if a stone-touch him, where it is touched, that part shall rot and putresse; and therefore it is that he slyeth from the noise of stones; as a dog is sooner frighted with a stone than a sword: if once he getteth amongst the sheep, he will not only kill as much as he can eat, but it he be not hindred, will destroy the whole flock. 5. When he is extreme hungry, he will eat earth; he never hunteth for his prey where his young ones are, left they should be discovered, for he hath a very great care of, and love for his young ones; and is very fierce when big with young: in all dangers she betaketh her self to flight before it be too late, and taketh her young ones with her into the woods: if she goeth to the sheep-fold, she alwaies goeth against the wind, because if she should go with the wind, it would carry her scent to the dogs; if she lose her feet in a snare, or one of them, she teareth her self for vexation, and is mad that she is taken.

160 The History of Brutes; or,

162 The Pissozy of Brutes; or, taken. 6. He is very fearful of stones, if he heareth the noise of stones, immediately he runneth away into the woods; nay, he will swim over rivers, which they do in companies, the hindermost taking hold of the tail of the foremost. 7. If he espyeth a Goat, he hiderh himself among green boughes that he may not be feen; when he is exceeding hungry, he will yawn and open his mouth; and if he can get nothing, he walketh with his mouth open: Wolves may be fitly compared to highway men, who go in companies. At Atticu a Province in Greece there was a Law made, that whofoever killed a young Wolf, should be rewarded with a talent of filver; but he that killed an old one, should have two talents; for they are great enemies to man; though the young ones did never do any mischief, yet they did what they could to kill them, to prevent the mischiefs that they might do for the future: Adulterers and Whoremongers are often punished by God with want and poverty, and thence it is that they are often forced to rob and steal to keep themselves alive; and therefore we may not unfitly compare Adulterers and Wolves together; and therefore it is that Harlots are called Wolves; so Romulus and Remus were nourished by a Wolf, that is, a Harlot, they being ballards themselves: if the Reader hath a mind to fee more of it, let him read Lastant. Lib. 1. Cap. 20. de vera sapientia. 9. He alwaies burieth some part of his prey, that so he may have something to eat when he cannot get a prey. 10. There is a wonderful secret antipathy between .

between the Sheep and the Wolf, that is plainly feen while alive, and when dead; for the sheepskin that the Wolf biteth, is afterwards full of lice: and I have heard that the guts of sheep made into fiddle-strings, will never tune with the strings made of Wolves guts; if Wolves skins lye among sheep-skins, they will be neverly spoyled; and if a Drum that is covered with a Wolves skin come neer a Drum that is covered with a sheep-skin, it will presently flye in pieces; but for the reason and truth of it, I shall further enquire when I come to speak of the sheep. II. They are very much a. fraid of fire, and cannot endure to fee a sword, and therefore some alwaies carry flints about them, and when they fee a Wolf they strike fire, which when he feeth, he flyeth away; the like he doth at the fight of a naked fword. 12. If a horse tread in the foot-steps of a Wolf, it maketh him dull and stupid for the present; and if a mare tread in her steps, she cannot cast her foale: Bolapolines, in his Hieroglyphicks, representeth an abortive woman, by a mare treading upon a Wilf; nay if she seeth but the guts of a dead VVolf any where, her strength decayes, as Camerarius telleth us, Lib. 1. Succife. 23. 13. though the be fo greedy and ravenous, yet is the very mindful of any one that doth her a courtesie. Bonfinius relateth a story of a VVolf, who when he was taken, a passenger that came that waies, fet him lose again; when he was free, he observed which waies the man went, and the house where he dwelt, and afterwards would often drive Horses and Cows our

of the field to his house; so that the fiercest creatures that are be mindful of kindnesses done to them; a VV olf when his belly is full, if among a flock of sheep, seemeth rather to be a lamb than a VV olf. Aristotle saith, that in a certain place in Greece, the VV olf will couple with the dog: when a company of Wolves have gotten a prey, they will equally divide what they have got; fometimes the Wolf and the dog will plot as it were together to go into a sheep-fold; She hateth the Bull, the Hart, the Fox, and the Goat; it hath all the properties and qualities of a Lion, he exceedeth the Lion in craft and deceitfulness; that creature which Albertus faith is begotten of a Stag and a Wolf, which some call a Los or a Lynx, is a kind of VVolf; it beareth an inveterate enmity to the Hart, and thence it is that in Latin he is called Lupus Cervarius, and for his ravenous and greedy nature cometh not behind the VVolf; nay, he will kill a VVolf, and hath been seen to have destroyed a young Lion; when he is hungry, and is eating, if he looketh back, he forgetteth that he hath any thing, and goeth to look after another prey: there is a beaft like a VVolf who hath a mane like a horse, whom some call a Hyana, he will go into graves, and devour dead bodies, a fit representation and symbole of those slanderers which do not spare to destroy the good name of their neighbour after he is dead. A VVolf will go among the sheep in the night time, and will learn those tones that the shepherds use to them; nay, they will learn the shepherds name, and will call them them out by their names; the shepherd thinking it to be the voice of a man, cometh forth, and when he is come out, the Wolf falleth upon him, and destroyeth him; so she often serveth dogs: Thus the Papilts used to let Book-sellers fell heretical Books, and then mark what Noble men did buy of them, and afterwards accuse them for it. The female Hyana is much craftier than the male, for it was never yet found where she lyeth at night; whatfoever she toucheth is made dull and stupid ever after. Philippus Camerarius, Succis. I Cap. 28. faith, That there are no Wolves in England; for they being exceeding destroyers of sheep, and making of Cloath being the chief of Englands. Trade; Those Malefactors in former times that were condemned, had their lives given them upon this condition, that each man should kill a Wolf; this creature is not only a fit representation of theeves and robbers, but may also fitly resemble the Devil, Hereticks, and Tyrants.

John. 10. 12. Christ maketh mention of the VVolf, in the parable of the shepherd and the sheep, by which the Devil is to be understood. For, I. As the VVolf continually goeth about to destroy men and beasts, so is the Devil the most implacable enemie to all mankind. 2. As the VVolf by nature is so greedy and ravenous that he can never be fatisfied, so neither is the Devil ever fatisfied with those millions of souls that he yearly destroyeth. 3. The VVolf hath a sharp and acute fight, seeing best in the night time; and they say of her that she can smell her prey when she is half half a Germane mile from him: Thus the Devil by so many years experience groweth more subtil, eafily perceiving to what fins every mans natural inclination leadeth him unto. 4. As they will sometimes devour a whole sheep, tometimes only some part of it; so doth the Devil, by divine permission, fometimes take away our estates only, sometimes our health; nay, fometimes destroyeth body and foul. 5. As the Wolf is a most crafty, cuinning creature; so is the Devil full of his crafty and Subtil devices; for as the Wolf chiefly seeketh her prey in a clowdy night, being then not fo easily perceived: so the Devil maketh his assaults, and tempreth men chiefly when under some heavy affliction; and as the Wolf goeth flowly, and often licketh her feet, which maketh her steps not so eafily heard; fo the Devil insunuateth himself into men, darting his tentations as infenfibly as the Sunbeams. Goats cannot defend themselves by the weapons which nature hath given them; neither can Somes keep their pigs from any one that will take them away from her; therefore the Wolf when. the goeth to take any of these, taketh them by the ear, and if he cometh not forward willingly, he Ariketh them with his tail; sometimes he maketh them run faster than himself, and so he leadeth them by the eare to the rest of his company, who stand in a certain place expecting the prey; and when he hath brought it, the rest of them fall on, and tear it in pieces. Albertus faith that he faw a Wolf catry a green willow in his mouth to deceive the Goats that love a sprig of a Willow-tree; than which there cannot be a fitter representation of Sathans malice and subtilty, whereby he entrappeth and enfoareth poor filly people, endeavouring to draw them from the truth, by suggesting his tentations and flattering devices, thereby drawing them into eternal deltruction. The Wolf useth no less subtilty in taking of the Bull; for she never setteth upon him forwards, lest he should kill her by his horns, but cometh behind him, leaping upon him (as we said before) filling her belly with earth, which maketh her the heavier, and so maketh up her weakness by her weight; she taketh a single calf thus, she draweth him away from the Cow, which she perceiving, it causeth a small combate between the Cow and the Wolf for a time, the calf in the mean time running up and down; when he hath tired the Cow, then he goeth to the calf, and teareth him in pieces: thus in like manner doth the Devil fet on young and old, suiting his temptations to their constitutions and inclinations; and oftentimes by the force of his temptations, and of those afflictions which oftentimes godly men lye under (were they not endued with faith and strength from above) would vanquish and overcome them; but when by strength he can do no-thing, he doth as it were come behind them by his fraud and deceit, and then beginneth a little to fall back, as if he were overcome, and so maketh him the less wary of him, thinking he is gone; but afterwards cometh on afresh with his new wiles with a greater violence, and fo destroyeth them; many instances and examples of this might be given; bur

but I shall proceed. 6. If a Wolf first espyeth a man, he doth by a secret virtue so astonish him, that he cannot cry out for help: thus the Devil, when by his tentations he besetteth a careless sinner, he eafily obtaineth the victory, triumphing over him when conquered; but on the other fide, if a man first espyeth a wolf, he is not so fierce nor ravenous as before: thus good men who are afraid of Sathans devices, who by prayer and other holy duties arm themselves against him, do as it were afright him, and make him fly; and as Wolves hate nothing more than the light of fire, and of a naked sword; so doth the Devil no less dread those sparks of divine light that come from the Scripture, and the prayers of good men, which are the arms and weapons of the Church; and therefore St. Chrysoftome rightly said, that swords are not so terrible to Wolves, as are the prayers of good men to Sathan.

2. We find that Hereticks are often compared unto Wolves; we read Alts 20: 28. That Wolves should come who would not spare the flock; so Matt. 7.15. VVe are commanded to beware of false Prophets who come to us in sheeps clothing, but inwardly are ravening VV olves; we may here take notice of the epithete given to false Prophets of ravening Wolves: There are some Wolves in Africa and in Agypt that will stand on the shore, and if they fee any fishermen, will take some of their fish from them, and run away with it: and on the other fide, Oppianus and several other good Authors tell us of another kind of Wolves that are called "APTICE-

yes, that are a kind of Goats, which are twifter than any of the former; for they go to hunt early in the morning, and do as it were leap upon their prey with an incredible violence; these are found in great companies upon Mountains; in the Win-ter time they are so venturous, that they will come into Cities, and there will go up and down very quietly untill they can fee a Goat, &c. which they will greedily fall upon, and run away with; this may feem to have respect to that Prophesie of the Patriarch, Gen. 49. 27. Benjamin shall ravine like a Wolf, in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at evening he shall divide the spoyle; although some would have this to signific the coverousness of the Benjamites, yet I can see no reason for it, because they were not fo cruel; and besides, what argument could that be of their coverousness, who though they took their prey in the morning, yet he divided it again at night: the Holy Fathers therefore do make this to be a prediction concerribe of Benjamine; for he in the morning, that is in his youth, was like a cruel and devouring Wolf; but at the evening, towards his old age, he gave food, the bread of life, which he distributed to the Heathens; these things being premised, any one, from what hath been said, may deduce very useful corollaries, such as these. I. The Wolf is said to also like a man so much that he takes he is said to astonish a man so much, that he taketh away his voice and speech; thus wicked men do rob the Saints of their wonted purity, yet they will talk of great things; for alwaies amongst wicked wicked men there is more feeming Religion than true piety; and as the Wolf is of so ravenous and greedy nature that he killeth more than he can eat; and if not hindred, will destroy the whole flock: fo wicked men do not fo much feek the hurts and ruine of one particular man, as of the whole Church; and as the Wolf is very fubtil and crafty, first going very slowly round about the flock, to see whether the shepherd, or any dogs be there; and when he feeth his opportunity, will rush among them with a great deal of fierceness . thus Hereticks, before they disclose their errors, will infinuate themselves into the minds of the people, and will use a great deal of hypocritical piety, boasting of their angelical holyness and peculiar visions which they have from God, and after they have thus prepared the minds of the common people, vent their impious errors that tend to the ruine of the whole Church, and as there is a natural enmity and antipathy between the sheep and the Wolf even after death: thus wicked menby their doctrine do not hurt the Church only while alive, but after death: there is a Law among the Atticks, that who foever killeth a Wolf shall be highly rewarded; of no less praise are they worthy that do discover the plots and devices of Hereticks and Deceivers: the VVolf if he cannot get the prey that he fought, he runneth up and down with his mouth open, making a great noise; thus are Hereticks very much troubled if their snare do not take as they would have them.

3.What

3. What Hereticks are in the Church, that are Tyrants in the Common-wealth; and therefore they are called by some Ethiopian VV olves : the Poets do feign Tyrannical Princes for their cruelty to be changed into Wolves: we read, in Ezekiel, of Princes that are like ravening Wolves devouring the prey, Cap. 22. 27. the same is said Wild. 3.3. It is easie to draw several other inferences from the nature of the Wolf, and to follow the comparison between the Wolf and the Tyrant further than I shall carry it now, which I leave to the studious; I could speak also to the Fable of men that were changed into Wolves, and other creatures; but I shall not enlarge much further on his creature; the History of Nebuchadonofor is no proof at all of men being changed into other shapes; for all that we find in Scripture concerning it is this, that he did eat grafs as Oxen, and that his body was wet with the dew of Heaven, untill his hairs were grown like Eagles eathers, and his nails like birds claws, Dan. 4. 30. Thave read of the Tyrant that promiled the Ahenians to make peace with them, if they would end away their Orators; the Athenians answered him with this Apologue, of the Wolves that offered to make peace with the sheep, if they vould fend away their dogs, the ready way for hem to be all destroyed; a fit answer for him, they being then as naked lambs among Wolves; as Christ told his Disciples, that he sent them out as ambs among Wolves, Luke 10.3. If. 11. 6. It s said, that the Wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and 174 The History of Brutes; or, the Leopard shall be down with the kid, and the calf and the young Lion together; spoken allegorically of the conversion of great ones; the same is spoken of them, Cap. 65. 25. Tyrants are compared to Wolves ravening the prey; those cruel exactions that were used to the people of Israel, God doth not call them barely robberies and thests, but rapines, as may be seen more at large in these following places, Is 1. 23.ch.2.vers.14.ch.10.2. CHAP. XXI.

Of the Dog.

His is a creature more commonly known that any we have yet spoken of, and hath many good properties in him; fidelity, love to his Ma ster, constancy, vigilancy, obedience, sagacity and memory.

n. He is more faithful than a servant, watching in the night, and like a Porter keeping the doors and gives notice by his barking of any thief of tranger; and therefore the Proverb is true, Tha the Dog bath nine lives, but,

2. Amongst all other creatures, there is no creature hath so much love to his Master as the Dog alwaies going along with him, knowing his voice and will find him out by his scent; if his Maste be killed, he will not leave his Carkass, but will betra etray the Murtherer if he feeth him, barking at im, and fastning upon him, fighting for his Maer against any one that shall assault him: Plutarch elateth a story of King Pyrrhus, who in a jourey found a Dog who for three whole daies toether lay by his Master that was murthered, neer eating any thing all that while; afterwards e found out the murtherer by slying on him, who eing examined consessed the fact.

3. He is very constant to any house where he is tept, and will not follow any one that shall entice im away: Jovius relateth of the Dogs in France hat fled into the enemies Camp, and licked their eet, which they took to significe their Victory, which afterwards came to pass; for thereupon Maximilianus Sphorsia vanquished the French.

4. Their vigilancy is known to all, although seefe are more watchful than they; and thence he French entring into Rome, were not disturbed at the Dogs, but were betrayed by the noise of a company of Geese; and therefore once every year several Dogs were slain, because they gave no notice of the enemies approaching.

5. No less is his prudence and sagacity, being no less sierce and rough to strangers than he is courteous to his Master: but he is especially an enemie to any one that he seeth come in a poorhabit; for he knoweth these do but rob him of what he should have. Among all birds the Valuere; and of all sour-sooted beasts the Dog hash the best smell; and therefore £lian saith he hash so quick a scent, that if you cut a piece of a dead

Dog

174 The History of Brutes; or,

Dog amongst several forts of meats, he will scent

it from all the rest, and will not touch it.

6. He is as obedient as he is constant or faithful; he will learn to do any thing, he will go into the Shambles, and fetch meat, pluck hairs off from ones head, &c. Plutarch saith, that in a Comedy acted at Rome, he saw a Dog that seigned his Ma-Ster had poysoned him, and as soon as he had taken it, all his body would shake and tremble, but that would abate by degrees, and at last would stretch himself, and never move at all; his Mafter cometh to him, and biddeth him rife, he then hearing him stirreth one part, and then another, untill at last he came to himself again; all which he did so cunningly, that Casar and all the rest of the Spectators were moved with no less laughter than admiration; not long after that he would draw himself up altogether, as if he were going to dye, and would lye without any motion at all, suffering himself to be dragged out by the heels, as if he had been dead; but in a little while after he recovered himself again, to the admiration of the Spectators; when he is hunting, or at any other time he will come at his Masters call, although he hath a good prey before him; he hath a greater respect for his Master than for himself, his actions are all for the good of his Master; when he is hunting, he will bring the prey to his Master, and he himself is content with the bones, nay, is content without them, if his Master will not give them him.

7. He hath a very strong memory, insomuch that he will remember the way to his Masters house, though through Woods and Lands, and will remember those persons a long time that have injured him: he will lay up those bones that he cannot eat, and fetch them out again when he hath occasion for them; when he is asseep in the night he will remember what he hath seen in the day-time; and therefore it is we often hear them bark in their sleep when no body is night them.

8. He is very careful of his whelps, and will fuffer no one to take them away from him; he loveth to be among company, but as timerous when among strangers, as he is bold among his acquaintance.

9. He hath a kind of ambitious desire; for Plutarch saith, that Dogs, if they get a hare alive; besmear their mouths with the blood of it; this they do not do if they run her dead, then they will not touch her, but stand about it wagging their tails, to signific that they rejoyce not so much in the sless of an Heroick spirit in Dogs, that if any one lyeth upon the ground, they will not meddle with them; and the Scholiast upon Homer saith, that it is the best way to secure our selves against Dogs, to sit down and hide our sicks; and we may adde further, that as the deepest Rivers make the least noise, so, fearful Dogs will bark more than they will bite.

10. A Dog cannot endure to see the Moon, and are very much asrighted at a Spettrum or apparition;

tion; and therefore when the Moon shines, Dogs be continually barking.

ti. When they grow old they are very dull and heavy; they then will fleep in the dirt, and the flies oftentimes will eat through their ears, which they might eafily prevent, yet are fo lazie that they will not, unless they come upon their face, and then they fnap them in their mouthes, eth, for that is the moistest of all the four winds, and all moisture hindereth the smelling: in Egypt the Dogs are so subtil, that because they know the Crocodites oftentimes devour them, they will not stand still when they drink, but drink as they run; and therefore the Proverb is, Canis ad Nilum, i.e. a sup and away; just as many men learn Philosophy; but on the other side, they have their ill qualities as well as their good.

I. He is a very filthy, uncleane creature, coupling himself publickly in the streets; and hath a very greedy stomach after his meat, and exceedingly loveth carrion; he satisfieth his lust with the Bitch that puppyed him. Deut. 23. God forbids that any money should be brought for the price of a Dog into the house of the Lard, vers. 18.

2. He is easily angered, and will be soon enraged at a stone or a stick that is thrown at him. Plutarch, in his Sympos. saith, that some Dogs have died because they could not take their revenge.

3. They cannot endure one another; one Dog will not fuffer another to come to the house, yet they will eat one anothers vermine.

4. Some

4. Some dogs fleep all the night-time, and go about in the day, these are very mischievous. 5. The Dog will eat his own vomit, and is subject to many Diseases, but especially they are aptest to grow mad; and when they are so, whatfoever they bite they make like themselves: it is a fign when a Dog will grow mad, if he will not eat what he used to eat, and will purge at the no e and mouth, and is very dull and heavy, barking at every one they fee; Hesychias saith, that all dogs have very hard deaths; and thus we have shewn both the good and the bad properties of the Dog; the Holy Scriptures, both in the Old and New Testament, draw many inferences from the nature of this creature, which, although they be very many, yet I shall fatisfie my felf, in speaking to two only, one out of the Old Testament, and another out of the New; that out of the Old Testament, is Judg. 7.5. when Gideon had brought a vast Army against the Midianites, lest if the Jews had overcome them they should have ascribed it to their own strength and valour, the Lord said unto Gideon, Every one that lappeth the water with his tonque as the Dog lappeth, him shalt thou set by himself; likewife, every one that boweth down upon his knees to drink: there were left but 300 of 20000. and those few were crowned with victory; a fit Symbole of the Elect, who get the victory over all their enemies; and those that drank water, represent those that received the Sacrament of Baptism, and so are listed among Gods Souldiers. 1. As there were a great multitude which drank, yet were rejected by Gideon, being a great fign of laziness and floath: so, many of those who are baptized, are rejected; which being careless and floathful, do not fight the good fight, nor keep the faith, and therefore lose the Crown, I Pet. 1. 10. 2. As Gideon received those only into the number of his Souldiers, that lapped of the water with his mouth as the Dog lappeth; a sign of fortitude and valour: so, those who were baptized, carry away the heavenly crown, being not addicted to this World, but diligent and fedulous in their calling; and, like Dogs, are faithful and industrious in searching out divine mysteries, being lovers of Christ, knowing his voice; neither will they be drawn from Christ through the temptations of Sathan, being very watchful, and like the wife Virgins, alwaies expecting the coming of Christ, very courteous to their kinsfolks, but are fierce and unpleasant to those who are strangers and enemies to Christ; they do also every thing to the honour of their Master Christ, though no temporal advantage should from thence acrew, who laftly are easily called back from a course of fin.

2. We read Matt. 15, there are several inferences drawn from the Dog, some of which seem to be spoken in his commendation, and others not. Thus, when the Syrophanician woman, whose daughter was sore vexed with a Devil, came to Christ and implored his help, received this answer, that it was not good to take the childrens bread, and cast it unto Dog; which she inverteth thus to her present condition, and saith, yet the Dogs do eat of the crumbs that fall from their Masters table; in which words Christ compareth the Heathen to Dogs: For, 1. We fee that Dogs will couple with any strange Bitch; thus, the Heathens were not any strange Bitch; thus, the Heathens were not like all other men, born in sin only, but of those Parents who made nothing of the ordinance of Marriage; this might be confirmed from many examples; thus the Aposile, Rom. 1.26. complaineth, that the Women changed the natural use into that which is against nature; as also the men leaving the natural use of Women turned in their lust one towards another. 2. They commonly bark at any professors that comet by and a mad Dog will flow passenger that cometh by, and a mad Dog will flye upon his own Master: thus, the Heathens, destitute of divine light, and without the true Religion, do blaspheme God, and, as it were bark at their Neighbours, by cursing of them. We do not use to feed Dogs with any thing but what is not sit for others to eat; the Heathens being so wicked and blasphemous against God, are not worthy of Christ. Further, Dogs do not use to run from their Masters, if they can but get food; the Heathens, as long as they prosper in this World, are very well contented, but when under trouble and afflictions, have nothing to support them: Dogs are of such a beastly nature, that (as we said before) they will devour their own vomit: thus it is with the Heathens, who, though often instructed in vertue by divers of their Poets, yet foon return unto their former wicked life; thus, having spoken what is necessary for his discommendation, now, I shall see what may be faid to his praise and commendation.

N₂

. Dogs

1. Dogs only wait at their Masters table, expecting what may fall; thus, the ignorant Gentiles had no other comfort but this, that they should expect what God had promised them, saying, in thy seed shall all the Nations of the Earth be blessed; neither did they desire to be preferred above the fews, but were very well content with what the bounty and goodness of God did give them: Children often sport themselves with little dogs, hence it is that we read, in the Proverbs, of Wisdome (i.e. the fon of God) sporting her self among the sons of men; and we fee that children take great care of Dogs, and will feed them if they can get it; the Heathens did continue long in their primitive ignorance and state of darkness untill Christ came and deliver'd them: Dogs will bemoan themselves when bereaved of their whelps; and it is the greatest trouble to good men to fee their children drawn afide from the truth; although, I must confess, Dogs as well as most other beasts have a great love for their young; yet, I doubt, we may find some perfons who, like fishes, leave their spawn in the water, never minding it afterwards what becomes of

4 He will not leave off barking and howling untill his Master give him something: thus, the Canaanitish woman, and every true Christian, ought to be constant, persevering in duty.

5. Also the Dog will be so fierce that he will flye upon any stranger, yet when corrected by his Master, will hang down his tail : thus all true Christians, when in peril and trouble, will cry out with Daniela

Daniel, I o thee belongeth right confiels, but to us confusion of face; and with the penitent thief, We are justly punished for our deserts; and like the Emperour Mauricius, who, when he saw his Sons and his Daughters slain before his face, did not murmur or repine in the least; but his Wife turning to him, said, O Lord, Thou art just and righteous in all thy Judgements. Luther, when he saw a Dog wagging his tail at dinner, used to say, that he begged by the very wagging of his tail; and, I wish, saith he, that we men were indued with the like nature, not to leave off our prayers because not presently received; this is a good similitude, though but a homely one. See more of this in Philippus Camerarius, Lib. 2. Succis.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the Sheep.

Take the word Sheep here for all kind of Sheep, whether it be the Ram, the Wether, &c. The Ram is the male, the Wether is guelded; although this be a domettick and common creature, yet it is worthy our observation, to consider, that it hath pleased the Ho'y Ghost very often to compare Christ to Sheep, as also all Christians: the Jews in their sacrifices offered more Sheep than any other creature, although they used to offer up Calves, Goats, Oxen, Heifers, Kids, as also Turtles and Pidgeons.

182 Pidgeons; but their daily facrifices consisted chiefly of Sheep; for every day, for above 1582 years, all the while that the Mofaical Law was objerved, there were offered two Lambs, one in the morning, and the other at evening, with fine flour and wine, which did fignifie to us holy Prayers and Ejaculations, with which we ought to begin and end every day. That Ram which Abraham offered in the Mount, instead of Isaac, was a Type of Christ; for, as the Ram was slain for Isaac, so Christ, the Lamb of God, was offered up instead of us; every day (as I said before) were offered up two Lambs, belides all other facrifices which fometimes did require Lambs and Sheep, as in the confecration of Priests, as also on their Sabbaths, and New Moons, and at the Passover, at Pentecost, and several other Feastivals, as also upon their Confessions, Purifications, &c. of which we may read at large in Exodus, Leviticus, and feveral other places, all which were but types and

Sheep. r. It is not a crafty, subtil creature, like to Foxes and Leopards, but dull and stupid, often wandring and running into deferts and by-places, where he meeteth but with worse pasture: in the Winter time they will run out of the pens into the fnow where they are fmothered, neither do they ever come back again unless the shepherd fetch them; it was wittily faid by him of a wanfigures, as they are called, Heb. 9. Now we come to speak of the nature and properties of the dring fheep,

Raro una errat ovis, raroq; reveritur una.

F 2. The Sheep is neither fo strong as a Horse, so couragious as the Lion, nor so consident as a Dog; he regardeth not the traps and snares that are layed for him, being gentle, and easily taken: the Sheep hath no gall, and therefore is more patient than other creatures that we have named before, never roaring nor crying out, when sheared; nay, they are silent, though about to be slain: whereas on the contrary, Swine, and several other creatures, are not only unwilling to be caught, but when caught, do make such a hideous noise as is scarcely to be endured.

3. Nature hath denied this creature any thing whereby to defend her felf; fome creatures have talous, others horns, but this nothing; and although Rams have horns, as Sheep have in fome Countreys, yet have they no courage to defend them; for Sheep are very timorous and fearful, and are very gentle when they have young ones, contrary to the nature of all other beafts; and thus is eafily made a prey of, either to man or beaft.

4. Of all creatures, none are subject to so many diseases as Man, the Horse, and the Sheep; as distempers in the head, and is also very subject to the Scab: and what we said before of their wandring abroad, so, the scabby Sheep is never single,

as the old Verse hath it:

Morbida facta pecus totum corrumpit ovile.

If they are driven far in a night, or heated, it maketh them lean; when it thundereth, they are fo affrighted, that they cast their young for fear.

5. They feem to have a great love to their Shepherds; for nature hath made them fo cowardly and weak, that they cannot live without some one to rule over them. A Shepherd hath especially these four things to do for the Sheep;

1. To lead them into good Pastures, and wholsome clear Waters; for a Sheep loveth green Meadows, and is very delicate; for if the cannot feed in such green Meadows, she will eat nothing at all; and counteth no labour lost if at last she getterh into a field that is green, and then she looketh about for cold, clear water, loving nothing more, not induring to drink of muddy waters.

2. The Shepherd is to keep them together, lest by their simplicity and foolishness they should Aray from the flock, and run into ditches and fens where they are destroyed without remedy.

3. He is to defend them by his Dogs against Wolves, or any one that shall disturb them when feeding: when any of them is with young, he taketh them up upon his knees, and cherisheth them.

4. He is to understand and know the signs and causes of their diseases; all good Shepherds

A Description of living Treatures. 185 ought to be thus qualified. When the Sheep hear the Shepherds voice, they all get together into one place, but especially when he singeth, for they love mulick exceedingly, and it maketh them feed the better: they are so delighted with it, that some think they would not live long if the Shepherd did not fing: the young Lambs as foon as brought forth know their Damms, though there be thousands of Sheep in the field together, yet they will know their Damm from them all by their bleating; and though they be never fo hungry and thirity, ver will they fuck of no one but of their own Dam; and the Damm, amongst hundred of Lambs, although of the same bigness, colour, and make the same noise, yet they will know their own Lambs ; this they do while young, but when once they come to be weaned, they know the Shepherds voice so well, that they will follow him, and flye from any one else; the Scripture reckoneth this amongst those creatures that cleave the Hoof, and chew the Cud, of which we have spoken very largely before: He loveth to eat of green willowleaves though they be very bitter: falt getteth them a great stomach, and therefore the Shepherd will oftentimes sprinkle salt in the water where they use to drink. The Sheep is observed to be very cleanly, and cannot endure, like the swine, to be in dirty places; there is scarce any thing in the Sheep but is of use to us, she giveth milk, bringeth forth lambs, we make cloath of her wool, and formerly her skin was worn for garments, of her guts are made fiddle-firings, and her dung maketh the ground fruitful; they bring forth young as long as they live, and are never barren, though not fo long liv'd as some other creatures: but to conclude, the will never go into water unless compelled, loveth company, and will not be alone if the can get to her fellows; hath alwaies the same bleating when hungry as when full; whereas men do not more rejoyce in prosperity, than they are cast down in advertity: And thus I have briefly run over the principal properties of the Sheep, from whence the Holy Scripture draweth many useful inferences from the nature of this creature; we read, Dan. 8.3. I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold there stood before the river a Ram which had two horns, and the two horns were high, but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last: I saw the Ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so in Chap. 7th. there was the vision of a Bear, by which we are to understand the fierceness, and ambitious desires that were in those Kings, like A. hasuerns, who by the instigation of Haman did intend to destroy all the Tems in one day; but afterwards he became as mild as a Ram; which, as he is even loaden with his horns, his flesh, and wooll, fo, the Persian Monarch did abound in all mauner of wealth, and it had two horns, viz. the Kingdoms of Media and Persia, with which he did push, as it were troubling and tormenting the Eastern Na. tions.

2. In Leviticus, and several other places, the Jews were commanded to offer up a lamb as a sa-crifice for their sins, which did signific to us Christ

A Description of living Creatures. 187 me true lamb of God, that taketh away the fins of the World: these lambs were to be facrificed, i.e. all upid and dull affections were to be cast away, and riven against, which they observed to be in the heep, as Origen well observeth on that place: but the have spoken more at large of this in the Chap. If the Camel, out of the learned Galatinus.

3. Matt. 25. 32. Christ placeth his people at is right hand, and compareth them to Sheep, beause of that wonderful meekness which they have arned of Christ; or else it may signifie to us, at as the Sheep is wonderful patient of injuries, likewise all good men have been alwaies very ady to suffer all calumnies and reproaches for brist, yea, even death it self: but enough of sele. I shall now speak a little to that notable ace where we find mention made of the Paschal amb, which is called, in the New Testament, the amb of God which was slain from the beginning of e World.

1. The Paschal Lamb which used to be eaten at e Passover, is a fit Symbole of the body and blood Christ, with which we are fed at his holy table; d doubtless, it did also significe unto us, that Incence, Patience and Meekness that was in Christ; the whole life and death of Christ was one conued example of humility and patience; and ideath was of great advantage to us, in whose with was found no gaile; & he truly might be said bear our insumities, who was throughly tri'd in all ings; the death of Christ was not only represted unto us by the Paschal Lamb, but those ver ry Sheep that were flain to cover Adam with in Paradife, the skins of them were a type of Christ.

2. The Paschal Lamb was slain towards evening; Christ the Lamb of God suffered not for us in the first ages of the World, but some thousands of years after the fall, to exercise the taith of good men, and then in the fulness of time God sent his Son, which was to be slain at even, not in his childhood, nor in his youth, but in his estate of manhood.

3. The Paschal Lamb was used to be taken from among the flock; Christ took not on him the nature of Angels, but the seed of Abraham, and so became the Captain, and Shepherd of his Sheep.

4. It was to be a male of a year old, without spot or blemish; Christ was persect man, but yet subject to divers infirmities, though without fin.

5. The blood of the Paschal Lamb was to be sprinkled on the door-post; thus is the blood of Christ by the preaching of the Gospel sprinkled on the hearts of men.

6. It was to be eaten with unleavened bread; Christ never doth that man good that doth not receive him into a pure heart.

7. It was to be eaten with bitter herbs, by which was fignified to us those many affiliations and calamities that the Christians were to undergo.

8. As there used to be but one Paschal Lamb in a house, so was there but one Christ, who was King both of Jew and Gentile.

9. That which remained of the Paschal Lamb was not to be kept, but to be burned, to signifie to

A Description of living Creatures. 18, us, that Reason is to be brought into subjection unto faith.

thus ought we to put on Ghrist to cover our naked fouls; faceb could not have received the blessing, unless he had put some skins over his hands to make them hairy, like Esan's; so, neither can we be made partakers of heavenly blessings, unless we have on us the righteousness of Christ.

fprinkled on the door posts, was a means to preserve the Jens from destruction, but was no benefit at all to the Egyptians; the blood of Jesus Christ in like manner doth not profit us, unless we have true faith, and shew it forth by our works: sinally, the Paschal Lamb was to be eaten in haste, with their loyns girt; and poor people that could not kill a Lamb of their own, were to go to their neighbours, and eat it with them: those likewise that do eat of the body of Christ, ought not to be doll and sluggish, nor of dissolute and wicked lives, but courteous and charitable to their neighbours.

2. Exod. 29. 15. a Ram was to be offered at the confectation of Priests, from whence we may learn, that as the blood of the Ram was to be poured on the right eare; so ought we to hear the word of God, for faith cometh by hearing.

2. It was to be poured upon the right care, and not on the left, which intimateth unto us thus much, that our faith ought not to be feigned, but sincere.

3. The bloud was to be sprinkled upon the thuml of the right hand of the Priest; it doth not suffice to hear the word of God, but we must set our hand to the Plough; for the Kingdome of God consistent not in words, but in holy living; we must put to our right hand, following the commands of God, not of men.

Further, the blood of the Ram was to be sprinkled round about the Altar; the bloud of Christ, in like manner, is to be sprinkled through the World, one drop of which (as St. Bernard saith) was sufficient for the redemption of the World, were there 1000. Worlds more.

Moreover, the blood of the Ram was to be sprinkled on the garments of the Priest, and yet many of them were meer hypocrites; there are many likewise which partake of Christ's table which are unworthy to be his guests.

Lastly, some parts of the sacrifice were given to the Priest, as the breast, and the shoulder, one of which is the sign of wir, and the other of fortitude; two vertues which of all others are most necessary for Ministers; by which also we see that Ministers ought to be allowed a competent subsistence, for which God did bless the people the better.

5. It is very well worth our observation, that Christ compareth all good men to Sheep, as himfelf is compared to them; and without question it doth figurate unto us that sweet and near union that there is between Christ and his Church.

I. Chrise

1. Christ being to prescribe laws to his Church, doth not compare it to a den of Lions, which all other creatures dread; nor to Wolves which are never satisfied, having such a greedy desire; nor to Bears which are alwaies doing mischief; nor to the stately Horse; nor to the crafty Fox; nor to the sluggish As; nor to the contentious Dog; nor to the luxurious Smine; nor to the leacherous Goat; nor to the intemperate Glutton, but to the Sheep; by which we are taught to shun and avoid all the former vices.

2. Sheep have nothing of fraud nor deceit in them; Christians likewise ought not to be crafty and deceitful in their dealings one with another.

3. Sheep do no harm neither to man nor beaft; neither ought Christians to do any injury to their friends or enemies, to good or bad; moreover, the Sheep is very patient and mild; Christians in like manner ought to be courteous and civil to all persons; and they are of all creatures the cleanlyest; so ought every member of the true Church to mortifie their lusts by the Holy Spirit: again, they love green Meadows, and clear water; neither doth the Church make the Jewish Fables nor the Turkish Alcoran any part of their Creed, but the word of God: but yet a little further, Sheep love to be among their fellows; thus ought it to be with good men, who should love the company one of another: if a Sheep strayeth, he never returneth again of himself, but lyeth liable to all dangers, unless the Shepherd bring him home; so good men, when they fall into errors, cannot be brought home but by the word of God: we do not use to bind Sheep in chains, but they go freely of themselves, with no less willingness ought all Christians to do their duty: when the Sheep is purfued by the Wolf, the hath nothing to defend her self withal; thus, neither have Christians any Arength of their own to relift the Devil, but what they have from their spiritual Armory mentioned, Ephes. 6. Sheep are often troubled with weak and infirm heads, having nothing of craft or fubrilty in them; neither can Christians do any thing in spiritual things by their own wit; they, (as we faid before) are as obnoxious to diseases as any creatures, excepting man and horses. God in all ages hath been pleased to exercise his Church with many afflictions and calamities, and therefore the Church is compared to a Sheep that is fateed for the flaughter; for, as Butchers are glad when they find a fat Sheep, so wicked men rejoyce at the calamities and afflictions of the Church: when once the Sheep hath the scab, he is separated from the rest of the slock; neither ought notorious, scan-dalous sinners to be suffered to have communion with the rest in the publick corgregation; for, as one scabby Sheep infecteth the whole flock, so the flips and failings of one Christian is often the cause of the fall of many weak ones. Sheep, as I said before, know their Dams as foon as they are brought forth; so ought we all to learn how to distinguish the true Church, and once found, never to leave her. I spake, in the former part of this Chap. of four four properties which did belong to the good Shepherd, all which may be fitly applyed to Christ, who is the good Shepherd: For, 1. He feedeth us, he giveth us food and raiment, health and plenty, mercies spiritual and temporal. 2. The Shepherd is to take care that the Sheep do not wander; Christ, as the Shepherd of our souls, giveth us his holy Spirit to guide and direct us, that we sin not against him. 3. In like manner he defendeth us from the Devil and all his instruments (this he doth by his own power, and the tutelage of Angels) who by all waies, by force and fraud, endeavoureth to oppose and ruine the Church. 4. Neither doth he neglect wandring and weak Christians; he taketh them up in his arms, and wipeth all tears from their eyes.

But, to conclude, we faid before, Chap. 20. speaking of the Wolf, that two drums, one covered with the Wolve's skin, and another with a Sheeps skin, will never agree in found; and that an instrument tuned with the gut of a Wolf, and the gut of a Sheep, will never make any harmony: and that a Sheeps skin and a Goats skin layed together, the hair of the Sheeps skin will shead: the reasons of which Conradus Gesner giveth us in these words; It is no wonder that a Wolves skin which by nature is more hard and folid, should give a clearer, & lowder found than a Sheeps skin which is more foft and porous: and, it is no wonder that a hard, solid body, should endure longer than a body that is more foft and pliable; as we see the feathers of an Eagle will last longer (it being by nature very 194 . The Vision of Brutes; or, very dry) than the feathers of a Goofe, which is by nature more moist and humid; so that a Sheep-skin consumes ne're the more for being said by the skin of a Wolf,; for it is by nature more solid and substantial, and therefore may very well sast longer than the other; as we see that the bodies of those persons which are lean and spare, may be kept much longer from putrisaction than those bodies which are more fat and gross.

We shall not speak to that place, Gen. 30. 37. where Facob peeled rods and laid them before the Sheep when they conceived; but shall only take notice of this by the way, that the same Device would not have the same Effect in other places; for, we must consider, that in those Countreys where Facob lived, the Sheep were wont to wander up and down in dry, barren fields, where they could not come by a drop of water untill noon, at which times they used to be driven to the wells; and there were watered; by which they being much refreshed, became more apt for Copulation, and the sight of the rods did work on their imagination; but I doubt whether it would have the like effect in other Countreys.

The fews will not eat the sinnew that is in the leg of a Sheep, especially, though they will not eat that part of any other creature, as being that part in which faceb was touched by God, Gen. 32.10.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of the Goat.

7 Hen they are young they are called Kids, afterwards, when guelded, are called He-Goats, otherwise Buck-Goats; those that have brought forth are called She-Goats; but if they have not brought forth, they are called Kids: some say that the Fallow-Deer is a kind of Goat, as allo the Orax, a wild creature in Africa: but, to let this pass. 1. It is commonly thought to be that which we call a Satyr; he loveth to be amongst the Briars, and thorny places, and is very delicate, biting off only the tops of boughes; but most of all The loveth to feed on the bark of the Beech-tree, as also on the leaves of shrubs and hedges: what tree foever he biteth, it proveth very noxious; for his breath is exceeding hot, which may be a fit embleme of flanderers, who turn what ever they hear of others to the worst; and therefore, as in old times it was an antient custome, That when any one let out a piece of Land, this was made one article of the Agreement, that the party which took it should not let a Goat feed in it: so I would have all men well to consider these Verses, Quisquis amat dictis aliorum ladere faman, Hans mensam vetitam noverit esse sibi.

196 The History of Brutes; or,

If he eat honey it is present death to him, although it is thought, that honey mixed with his own milk is very wholfome for him: the herb Eringo, or Sea-holly, is almost as deadly to him; for if he eateth of it, he is so thunnyed with it, that he cannot stir from the place where he standeth; neither will the rest stir unless the Shepherd take that away: a fit resemblance of those men that take bribes, who, although, before they receive them, they are very active in their Clients Cause; yet afterwards, when they have got what they can get, they then begin to grow negligent in the cause; for gifts corrupt Judgement, and will make a man perjured: he said well, I have received a bribe, and am not free. Geats have a great deal of hair under their chin, which is called their beard; if any one taketh a Goat by the beard from amongst the flock, the rest will stand still, as it were amazed. Further, he is very often troubled with the Epilepsie, or Falling-sickness: some say, that whoever eateth of Goats-flesh, especially if it be old, are very subject to that disease. The Goat of all other creatures is thought to be the most leacherous; for if he see other Goats in the act, he will run at them; his lust is so great, that sometimes they do endeavour to couple with women. Plutarch, Calins, and others, do relate a story of one whose name was Crates, who was killed by a Goat: for it was observed of him that he loved a she-Goat, and was often feen to be familiar with it: at the time of copulation Geats do sweat very much, and have a very strong scent cometh from them, whence

A Description of living Creatures. 197 whence cometh the Proverb of those men that have a ftrong scent about them, that they stink like a Goat; Olet ut Hircus, there is a kind of an antipathy between the bloud of a Goat and the Adamant stone; for, although it cannot be broken neither by the hammer, neither can it be softened by the fire, yet the blood of a Goat will break it: a fit representation of the blood of Christ, by which only Sathan is overcome: some have made Bowes of Goats-horns, with which they used to kill wild Goats, like those men that cherish those who afterwards are their greatest crosses: thus are arrows feathered with the wings of Birds, that afterwards prove their own destruction: thus we use to fay, that when we are injured by any of our own kinred, we see some of our feathers in the wound. The Goat is of no use to the Husband-man for the tilling of his ground; neither is it of any use in war, but, that fometimes coats are made of their skins; in some parts of Africa they make cableropes of Goatshair; and Ælian saith, that in some places of the Caspian Sea there are Goats as big as Horfes; their hair is fo fine, that the best forts of Garments are made of it; as, in Arabia, good cloath is woven of Afses-hair; and Zembelitas telleth us, that in Lycia there are Goats have hair as long as womens hair; we read, Exed. 25, that the Jews were commanded to bring Silver, Gold, Purple, Scarlet, and fine Linnen, and Goats-bair, of which were made curtains, which hung over Silk-curtains; by which is fignified unto us, that every one ought to give something towards the building of the Temple; but prophane stories tell us, that they used to make their tabernacles of Goats skins, (Calins, Lib. 27. chap, 14.) as in Moses his time, tabernacles used to be covered with Rams skins, and Badgers skins dyed, as we read, Exod. 26. 14. thus, the Author to the Hebrews, speaking of those course Garments which the Prophets of old were forced to wear, Chap. 11.37. faith, that they were clothed with Sheep-skins and Goat-skins; for there is nothing so useful to us as their skins, though some do make cheese of their milk; but it is very rank: many of them cannot feed together, as Gaberius, a Senator of Rome, found dearly to be true; who feeding a 1000. Goats together, lost them all; fo that it appeareth from this, that that place which will feed a 1000 Sheep, will not be ground enough for art 100 Goats. She, like the Cow, will kick down the milk as foon as fhe hath given it; like those men, who, though they have many good qualities, yet have more bad ones; thence cometh the Proverb, Like the Cow, that giveth a good mess of Milk, and afterwards kicketh it down with her heel. He seldome stayeth long in a place, alwaies running up and down: the Goats in Arabia do exceedingly love Cinamon, and if you have but any Cinamon about you, he will follow you any whither; fo that we may fee a kind of sympathy that there is between the Goat and Cinamon; they have a very quick hearing; for Horace faith (but how true, I know not) that she heareth not only with her ears, but with some part of her throat. Sheep

Sheep and Goats, as Aristotle saith, in some places bring forth twice in a year; some do gather it from that place, in Gen. 30. when as, in that place, Facob's words do not mean as if the same Goats brought forth twice in a year, but that some brought forth, some sooner, and some later.

The fubtilty and craftyness of this creature is very great, if we may believe Munanus; who reports, out of Pliny, that a couple of Goats meeting one another on a long Bridge, which was fo narrow, that they could not pass by one another; neither of them would go back to give the other way; fo that one of them lyeth down, and the other goeth over his back; which should be an example to us of love and unity; and when once our private interest doth meet with the publick, so that one of them must go back (as it were,) let the one give place to the other, to prevent all contention and divisions: an instance of which we have in Jonathan, who, though possibly was as strong as David, yet he would not stand to contend, or resist him, knowing that he was chosen of God, but gave place to him: I might further inlarge this, but let this suffice.

Moreover, It is very patient, and content with a little; the Buck-goat most commonly goeth the foremost of the flock, like as the Bell-wether goeth out, and cometh in, the first of the flock; and they (as some have observed) are prouder than the rest, because of the small difference that there is between him and the rest; according to the Proverb, Vacua vasa plus tinniunt, i.e. Empty vessels cellor of Paris, made.

The Wild Goat is called the Roe-Buck, or Fallow-Dear; it is called also the Ibex, or Eveck, the Oryx, or the American Wild Goat: the she-Goat is very quick-sighted, her crye is weak, but very shrill; which the hunts-men do imitate, shaking the leaves of trees, the noise of which bringeth them out of their denns; to which may be added that Verse of Martial.

Pen.

Pendentem summa capram de rupe videres : Casuram speres, decipit illa canes.

The Fallow-Deer differeth from the wild Goat in this, that the horns of the Fallow Deer have not so many branches in them as the wild Goat; the horns of the one bending forward, but the other bending backwards. The Ibex or Eveck is a kind of Goat found chiefly in the Alps, something bigger than the he-Goat, having very large horns, by which, when she leapeth down from a rock, she keepeth her self from the stones; she is very swift, and when at any time hunted, if she hath no way to escape, she runneth upon the hunts-man, & tumbleth him down, so escaping; the Oryx, or wild Goat in Africa, differeth from all the rest, in that his hairs turn towards his head: they are exceeding fierce, oftentimes killing Lions and Tygers, and is never satisfied but with the death of whatsoever affaulteth it; and, although all the kinds of this creature are very good at leaping, yet the Eveck hath his name from an Hebrew root, which fignifieth to leap: he alwaies liveth upon Rocks and Mountains, which are fo cold that the fnow lyeth there all the year long; for, unless they did dwell in those places which are very cold, they would grow blind: they are very nimble, and climb any thing, if they can but fet their claws in: and thus we have spoken to the several properties of the Goat; from which creature, the Holy Scripture borroweth many similitudes; two of which I shall only speak to here; the place in the Canticles, where Christis compared to the Goat, or Hind, I have spoken already to, in the Chap. of the Hart: it is very well known, the comparing of wicked men to Goats, at the last day; by which are meant all lustful & lascivious men, who shall then receive their reward. Levit. 15.16. the Scape Goat is there spoken of, which was to be offered for the sins of the people, and that was to be done only by the High-Priest once a year : Christ, our High-Priest, offered up himself once for us, and went into the Sanctum Sanctorum, and by his miracles did te-Rifie, that he was the Son of God; while one Goat was offering up, they laid the fins and transgressions of the people upon the head of another Goat, which was done thus: Aaron laid his hands upon the head of the wild Goat, which afterwards was fent into the wilderness; by which was signified unto us, that Christ was to suffer without the City; thus we read, Heb. ult. that they lead Christ without the Gates of the City; he was nailed to the Cross, fo, that he could not fee the City: and thence was the custome of placing Pictures with their faces to the West, in Churches.

2. The Kingdome of Alexander the Great is compared to a he-Goat, Dan. 8.5. and as he was considering, behold, a he-Goat came from the West, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the Goat had a notable horn between his eyes; and he came to the Ram that had two horns, and was moved with choler against him, and smote the Ram, and broke his two horns: the Grecians, here, are compared to Goats, and Alexander to the he Goat, because he was to be born of the Greeks; the Grecians, because of their nimbleness and sagacity, are well compared to Goats; but it informeth us thus much of them likewise, that they were unstable, and fleeting; as they used to say, that the Romanes spake from their hearts, but the Greeks from the teeth outward: as the bel Goat is more swift and hafty, powerful and luftful than the Ram; fo was Alexander the Great, who overcame the Ram, the King of Persia, by his great horn, his great prudence, and valour : he touched not the ground as he went; for he flew, breaking the two horns of the Ram, viz. Media and Persia: but when this he-Goat was grown too big, his great horn was broken; that is, he did not dye in his old age, but in the flower of his age; which is fignified in these words, his horns were broken: that day in which Alexander was born he fet the most famous Temple of Asia on fire, viz. that of Ephesus; and therefore the Magicians prophesied, that the Incendiary of Asia was born that day: of his broken horn arose four other horns, i.e. the four Succesfors of Alexander, of which we spake at large, Chap. 8. Further, Alexander, when he was 23 years old, went to Ferusalem, where he facrificed, and heard this prophesie, concerning himself, read, and explain'd, with a great deal of joy: the History is worth the reading at large, in Josephus Book, 11. There is another pretty Story, which we may read in Herodotus, Lib. 2. of a question that arose between the Egyptians and the Phrygi-ans concerning their priority; which King Psam-metychus undertook to decide, thus; He commanded two infants to be brought up by a Shepherd, amongst the Sheep, and commanded him, that no one should speak a word to them, and that they should suck a Goat, which accordingly was done; the Shepherd was to observe the first word that they spake; at a certain time the Shepherd opening the door, both of them being hand in hand, cryed out Beccus, which they often repeated; this was told to the King; he enquired what that word signified in any language, and they found, after long fearch, that it fignified bread, a-mong the Phrygians; and fo ever after the Egyptians acknowledged the Phrygians to be the more ancient Nation; although Weken fignifieth Bread, and Becket fignifieth a Baker; and the Phrygians did use the Germane Tongue, as Historians tell us; yet, no doubt but they expressed that inarticulate found which they heard from the Sheep. for there found which they heard from the Sheep; for there is no tongue or language that is natural to any one, but all are to be learned: the Hebrew tongue is not natural to the Jew; for if a Jew be born in Germany, France, or Spain, he will speak the language of the Countrey where he is born; and will as foon learn Hebrew there, by the help of a Master (without which, he cannot attain it in his own Countrey) as his own Countrey: but this by the way.

CHAP. XXIV.

Of the Ape.

This is a very known creature, very much like the Monkey; the Ape hath a large Tail, but the Monkey hath none at all; this being the only thing almost wherein they differ: this creature very much resembleth the Marmoset, which is like an Ape, very apish, and never staying long in one place: Vesalius and Columbus, two samous Anatomists, tell us, that Galen had more skill in the anatomie of an Ape, than of a Man. But now I shall speak to the nature of an Ape, properly so called.

1. He is very like a man in feveral parts of his body; he hath a very ill-favoured face, his nose is almost flat to his face, which is full of many wrinkles; his eares are movable; he liveth on the tops of Mountains and Trees, and in the holes of Rocks.

2. As he is very like to man in several parts of his body, so he doth strive to imitate mens actions, but very soolishly, and not at all like those actions which he seemeth to imitate; he will learn any childish action quickly, as to play upon the pipe; sometimes he will act the part of a Carter, at another time he will look a childs head, crack muts, &c. he will play with dogs and little children, and if care be not taken, will kill them: 10 Ælian reporteth of an Ape, who feeing a Nurse washing a little infant, he, in the Nurses absence, itrippeth the child, and washeth it with hot water, and fo scalded the child to death.

and

4. The foolish imitation of the Ape often proveth his own ruine; for he hath a very strong body, and cannot be taken by force, but by some wile or trap: the huntf-man when he feeth an Ape, goeth before him, and pulls off his shooes, and combs his head, and washes his face, and so goes his way, leaving a veffel full of mud behind him: the Ape coming to wash himself, as the hunts-man did, and daubing himself with the mud, the dirt getteth into his eyes that he cannot see; and he leaves also shooes of lead behind him, which, when he hath tyed on, he cannot stir the hunts-men when they go to take him, carry a looking-glass tyed to their head, with many ropes hanging upon it, which, when they go away, they leave behind them, which the Ape tyeth on when they are gone; the hunts-men seeing this, catch hold of the ropes, and fo take him.

5. He loveth himself very much, and is very sen-sible when any one praiseth him; and loveth to fee himself in a glass. There is no creature loveth her young ones so well as the Ape, and with a great deal of joy he will shew them to all in the house; he is alwaies hugging, and making much of them, although they be the most deformed creatures of all others: GOD hath given them dugs in their breast, not as other creatures; whence it is, that

g Deliftunin of living Creatures. 207 they can feed them in their bosome; they love their young so much, that oftentimes, by too much imbracing, they kill them: when he is put to flight at any time, he carryeth one of his young ones at his back, and the other before him; he carryetis that on his back that he loveth best; in any great danger she is fain to let go that which she holdeth in her claws, while the other that she hath the least love for, remaineth safe upon her back: which representeth to us those Parents that have too great a love for some children, while they neglect the others; but yet we often fee, that those that they love least prove the best, when the other come to ruine: an example of which we have in our first Parents; which bare a greater affection to Cain than they had to Abel yet notwithstanding, Cain, and his whole posterity, were rejected in the deluge, when as the other was received into God's favour, and faved. Moreover, the male hath fo great a love for his young ones, that if he feeth one of them look as if it were not kindly used

6. The ridiculousness of his actions is no less than the deformity of his body; for he will not only imitate the actions of men, but is very unlucky, and mischievous; wheresoever he biteth any one, it is very dangerous, and hard to be cured: he is so wild, that he can hardly be kept in with chains; and though he be tamed, yet he is foon as by her damm, he will correct her for it.

wild again as ever.

7. He will eat any thing, be it never fo filthy; he will eat lice with a great deal of delight, and loveth to crack nuts; but especially he loveth apples, and wine; and will drink so long of it untill he is so drunk that he cannot stand.

8. There is a great antipathy between the Apa and the Lion; the Ape being a crafty, subtil creature, but the Lion (as we faid, Cap. 6.) hateth all manner of craftyness: the antipathy between the Lion and the Ape is further seen in this; that if the Lion be sick of any disease, he can no waies be cured but by eating of the flesh of an Ape. Ælian laith, that among the Indians, no Apes that are red are suffered to come into their Cities, because they are so lustful and lascivious, insomuch, that they oftentimes affault the women. They will know their Masters where they are long kept, and will remember any injury that is done unto them, but will as long feign their anger, untill they have a fit opportunity to revenge it; an Ape is an Ape, though cloathed in never fo rich garments; although by fools and children he may be taken and faluted for a man, yet he cannot hide his natural deformity. Gregory Nicene telleth us of an Ape, who being cloathed in very rich habit, did dance very exactly, according to the Musick, in the City of Alexandria, and that for a long while together, untill one of the company throwing some nuts to him, he left off his dancing, and fell to gathering up of the nuts, to the great laughter of the beholders; like, as many men, who are intrusted in great Offices, honoured by all men; yet if any private gain offereth it felf to them, they prefently discover that secret wickedness that syeth hid.

Athenaus relateth of Anacharsis the Philosopher, who seeing many soolish things acted, did not laugh at all; but seeing an Ape brought upon the Stage, broke out into a great laughter; and being asked the reason of it, answered, that it was made for nothing else but to laugh at: and these are most of the chief qualities and properties of the Ape; to which we might compare all Flatterers and Dissemblers, and even the Devil himself, who may not unfitly be called God's Ape.

1. Then, the Ape hath not the reason of a man, but without respect to the place, persons, or time, do imitate many of mens actions, without either wit or discretion: thus do Dissemblers and Flatterers; when they cannot give counsel, they applaud and commend that which they have done; by which means, as Polybius faith, they often betray not only their weakness, but their folly: thus it was in the Reign of Philip, some then imitating Melancthon, in the gestures which he used in his Sermons; thereby discovering their great folly; not considering their time, nor the difference of persons; to which we might adde the foolish imitation of the Germanes, wherein they shew a great deal of weakness; according to that known flory of the Painter, who was commanded by the Duke of Venice, to describe the several habits of the Countreys; when he came to paint the Germanes, he painted the Ape, carrying a piece of cloath; and being asked the reason of it, he answered, that the Germanes, like so many Apes, did imitate the garments and habits of all Nations; and therefore he had left them a whole piece of cloath, that they might please themselves in their habits.

210 The History of Brutes; or,

2. Apes, (as we faid before) are often caught by their foolish imitation: 10, oftentimes such Flatterers get nothing else, but to be made a laughing-stock; like Phaeton, who would needs drive his Fathers Charriot, but could not do it. Apes are very proud, and love to behold them-felves in looking-glasses: Flatterers, of all men, love to be praised; Apes, although they move laughter oftentimes, yet are very unlucky, and mischievous: thus are Flatterers, as we find sometimes by fad experience, in the Courts of Princes. We seldome find an Ape in poor peoples houses, but most of them are to be found in great mens houses, and Princes Courts: Flatterers are seldome in the poor mans cottages. Apes often sport themselves, and play with their Masters: thus do Flatterers oftentimes deceive their Princes, and bring them into unavoidable dangers: examples of which we read too often in History. Apes are fo impudent, that they will not fear to disturb a Lion: Flatterers are oftentimes the ruine of great Favourites, by the calumnies and reproaches which they cast upon them, which Euripides found to be true; being very familiar with Archelaus, one uight coming out of the Court, the Courtiers fet the dogs at him, which tore him to pieces. And Aratus had the same fortune, who was poysoned; which he perceiving, cryed out, Hac sunt pramia Regia Amicitia, suge Aulam; Moreover, they are good good for nothing but to provoke laughter; and Flatterers are good for little else: as Aurelianus, who used constantly to keep a very big man, who had no other office but to drink with strangers: the sless of an Ape is good for a Lion, if distempered with a Fever; the posterity of those who are thus soothed up by Flatterers, pay dear for their Ancestors folly: all these might very well be applyed to the Devil, who is God's Ape; who, of old, did use to prophesie to the Heathens, and foretell things to come; to seign miracles, as he did in Egypt by the Magicians: and many things more might be added, but let these suffice, as to the nature of the Ape.

CHAP. XXV.

Of the Squirrel, Weafel, and Gulo.

THE Squirrel is very common amongst us; he hath a very large tail, which serveth indifferently for a shadow and a covering: he layeth up his food in the Summer for the Winter; he eateth often, but drinketh very little; he layeth up what he cannot eat, and loveth sleep, which maketh him very fat: he liveth in hollow trees, where they build their neasts, and bring forth their young; his tail serveth him for wings, which he useth often wagging of it when he is to leap on any thing; if he is to go through any water, he will get upon 1212 The Pictory of Brutes, or,

upon a piece of wood; his tail serveth him instead of a sail, so swimming over, carrying his food in his mouth. She hath divers holes and caverns in the earth where she liveth, and each of these hath feveral waies to it, which she stoppeth up with her tail; when the wind bloweth, if the wind is in the North, she stoppeth the hole towards the North, and leaveth that hole open which is Southward. Some tell us (but how true I know not) that he can fore fee a storm, or any tempestuous water, a long while before it cometh, and will provide against it, stopping up her little holes that lye to that point of the compass that the tempest will come at. He sheddeth his hair once every year, sometimes in the year he is almost quite bald; yet he is not long without his hair; for when it groweth again (which is doth in a short time) he hath more than he had before. Squirrels are of two colours, fome of them are red, and others are grey; we might deduce many inferences from the nature of this creature; it might be a fit refemblance of a frugal man, he securing himself against all mischances of fortune, providing suitable remedies against them; and this is not at some particular feafons only, but all his life long: thus should the man that is frugal, observing a mediocrity in all things, never exceeding his due bounds, not being given to drinking, gaming, nor any thing else to excess: there are some things in the nature of an Ape which we thould avoid, they only taking care for themselves, alwaies either sleeping or eating, doing no good to no one but to themselves. The

Squirrel

Squirrel, as foon as he hath eaten inordinately, goeth to fleep; and after he is awake again, then he falleth to eating afresh, as if he had eaten nothing before. And thus we have spoken what is necessary, or worth observation in this little creature. The next that cometh in order to be spoken to, is the Weasel; it may be called Mustela, quasi mus longior, because it is something longer than a mouse; for, although it doth not belong to any kind of mice, yet it may be faid to have a very great likeness and affinity with it: it was the opi nion of the Ancients, that the Weafel conceived at her eare, and brought forth at her mouth; and therefore it was forbidden to the Jews: that they might know it was a most wicked custome to ag-gravate what they heard. But this is frivolous, when as it conceiveth, and bringeth forth as other like creatures: but should we grant it to be so as they fay (as it is not) it might learn us thus much, that we ought to consider well before we speak : according to the counsel that the Son of Syrach giveth us, learn before thou speak, chap. 18.20. The flesh of the Weasel was forbidden to the Tews, to teach them that they should not fear what should hereafter befall them.

The Weasel is no less crafty than it is time-rous; and although she bringeth forth her young ones in the house, she often changeth her nealt, lest being discovered, her young ones should be taken away: some tell us, that if her young ones at any time were hurt, she seeketh out for some herb proper for the distemper, with which she cureth them,

2. They

2. They have a natural enmity against Serpents, and Mice have as great an enmity against them. The fecret members of the Weafel are very deformed; as therefore the Serpent, fo is the Weafel commonly feen in houses: it is their work to catch mice, which is most of their food; Weafels de-Aroy more mice and moles than Cats: it hath been observed, that those creatures which eat both the same food, can never agree one with another. The Weafel hath a particular way to find out ferpents holes: for they defend themselves against the serpent, by taking some rue in their mouths, and then go in boldly to the serpent, and will kill it, let it be never so big; nay, they will kill a Basilisk; it may be a representation to us of all Christians, against whom the Devil hath alwaies had, and doth still express the great enmity he hath against them; but this may be for our comfort, that he is easily overcome by the vertue of rue, that is, by the blood of Christ. If the Weasel be angered he will send forth a stinking smell from his body, and is as mischievous when yexed, as a mad dog: he destroyeth many small birds; for what the Wolf is to the Sheep, that is the Weasel to Fowls; and as he cannot endure the ferpent while he is alive, fo when he is dead, his gall is a fovereign remedy a-gainst the poyson of the serpent.

The Weafel is a very swift creature, his teeth are venomous, he sheddeth his hair, and is very wild, and hath a very nimble body. The field of wild Weafel is somewhat larger than the dome-Hick; he will catch abundance of small birds in a day: but the Iliffa, a kind of Weafel which destroyeth cocks and hens, he devoureth also fishes, fowls, and birds; and to prevent their crying out, he first bites off their heads: the Martin may be also called a kind of Weasel, as also the Civet-Cat, which is the better fort of Weafels, of which there are two forts; fome live in Cities, others in Woods and Deferts, but especially in the Fir-tree and Beech-tree; they are like to the Weasel in every thing, excepting these two. 1. That his dung smelleth very sweet; therefore it is that they are so much prized. 2. Although he will destroy the poultrey, yet he will bring them home to the house where he is; which is a fit resemblance of gratitude: an example of which we have even among thieves, who have alwaies some respect to their relations: and those men are worse than beasts who will lay violent hands on those men by whom they subsist: by the way I shall note this, that the Squirrel Weasel will become tame, if their teeth be rubbed with garlick. Deut. 11. 29. the Jews, among other things, were forbidden the field mouse or shrew, which is a kind of Weasel, though not fo commonly known to us; but some do think that the word doth not properly fignifie the field-mouse called a shrew; for there are many words in the Latine version of the Bible, which do not agree with the Hebrew: this is a very small creature, almost as big as a Weasel; it is wholly given to his prey, and is very crafty in taking of it, and given much to excess and intemperance; if any one cometh by him, he will lye still, and feem tame untill till he come nigh, and then he will bite, which is venomous: if therefore the word in the Hebreio fignifieth a shrew, we may learn thus much, that God would have us to shun all the vices abovenamed. The Ferret may not unfitly be called a kind of Weafel; he hath a little head, a red back, and a white belly; his hair sticketh so close to him, that his skin will come off as foon as his hair; this refembleth covetous men, who, as the Comædian well said, will part with their teeth rather than with their money; it is called in Latine Furo, or Furunculus, from furor, to steal; because it stealeth, and carryeth away all he can get to his hole, laying up a great deal of corn against winter, without any chaff amongst it; so that one may commonly see half a bushel of corn layed up in one Weafels hole, so that it may be well called Viverra, quasi vi omnia ad se verrens: if the male feareth that he shall at any time want food, he will not suffer the female to eate any; but she is alwaies too cuming for him, finding out fome other way to it; which may ferve to admonish those men who are too severe and rigid to their Wives, who sometimes are too wife for them; and cannot alwaies fee nor prevent their plots: the Ferret agreeth with the Weasel in all things, but in this, that he hateth the Coney, which he hunteth out of their burroughs into the traps that are layed for them: he is so cruel to them, that he will kill a rabbet that is as big again as himself; when under ground he is very fierce, but otherwise is very tame and gentle; contrary to the nature of dogs, who are garace south a state fiercest when at home; but when in strange places are very tame; like those men who are very cruel and rigid at home, but when they go abroad, feem to be very mild and courteous. Formerly they used to carry Ferrets along with them to hunting, and to fend them into the Coney-bur-roughs to drive them out. The Policat is a kind of Weafel also, they are most commonly very fat and ravenous: he will fore-fee a tempest coming, and will run into their holes to shelter themselves: I cannot give much credit to those who say that they can know a tempest a great while before it cometh, which, I think, no man can do; not A-Strologers, who pretend so much skill in knowing the weather; for tempests and storms, and all changes of weather depend only on the will of God; but I think they may fometimes hit to fore-tell the weather by chance: but to fay that it will certainly be fuch & fuch weather, I think no one can tell for we have oftentimes feen that God hath disappointed them in that which they have fore-told would most certainly come to pass; but this by the way. The Poltcat lyeth hid, and is feen but very little all the winter; fleepeth very much, which maketh them grow exceeding fat : when they are purfued by the dogs very close, and are in danger of their lives, they will hold their breath, thereby puffing themselves up, being then better able to bear blows. There is a natural antipathy between this creature and the Fox; for the Fox will oftentimes be in his holes, which if he cannot get by force, he will do it by fraud; he will dung and urine at the

the mouth of the hole, which maketh fuch a stink, that he cannot endure the smell of it, and is forced to leave her hole. The Policat is almost as big as a Fox, and some say that it is a kind of Fox : if so, it may represent to us Apostates, who of all other men are the most bitter enemies against that Religion of which they were once themselves; for in all ages of the World, hereticks, like those Apostates, have opposed and persecuted the true Church, striving only for riches, and by calumnies and reproaches intend to ruine the rulers of the Church; and if they cannot do it so, they will do It by curses and maledictions; they never go far from their holes, nor do they stay out long when they do go out, which is only in the night-time, because then they know all things are safe and quiet; it is called in Latine Taxus, which is the word for the Ewe-tree, yet from thence came the Dachfus: to conclude, Weafelt may be tamed feveral waies, and when they are tamed they are very useful; they will fetch young birds from trees, they will drive out young Pidgeons out of their holes, and will hunt Coneys out of their burroughs: by which we fee, that God hath made nothing in vain, though at present we cannot see the usefulness of it: the next thing that cometh in order to be spoken to, is the it was unknown to the Ancients, found only in the Southern Countrys; of a very greedy and ravenous nature; about the bigness of a Dog, and hath a Cats face, the body and tail of a Fox, and the colour of a Weasel; he hath 2 particular properties; 1. He is very cruel:

A Description of living Creatures. 219 and, 2. Very ravenous. He will climb up trees, and leap upon any man that goeth by, and is very cruel.feeding most upon dead carkasses; and where he feeth one, he will eat so long of it, that his belly will be almost ready to burst; as soon as he hath done, he will look for two trees that stand close together, and will squeeze himself between these trees; and so what he had forced in he forceth out: having done so, he maketh haste again to the dead carkass, then to the two trees again, and doth as before: this he doth untill he hath devoured the carkass: by which filthy creature, God would have us to hate that sin of Intemperance; for we fee that most of our domestick creatures observe a rule in eating and drinking, and will not exceed the rules of temperance; nay, we cannot make them, neither by fair means nor foul, to take more than will satisfie nature: but it is to be much lamented, that man, who was born in the image of God, should so violate the laws of nature, as to exceed the bounds of sobriety, that which the very beasts are free from: and by this creature we should learn to detest the beastly fin of Intemperance. This creature, though such a gorging creature, is satisfied when he hath eaten one carkas; but men, when in their cups, know not when they have enough, turning day into night, and night into day; and when nature will bear no more, but forceth them to bring it up again; they will after their vomit, return again to their cups : some have merrily put the question, whether there may not be Antipodes in the same City, and have concluded on the Affirmative: these Antipodes are the Gluttons and Drunkards above-mentioned, who have their day when we have our night; and when we have our day, and are about our business, they are taking their rest.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of the Hedg-hog.

T Need not go about to make a large description I of this creature, because it is so very well known; it is all over full of prickles, so that no one can touch him without pricking himself: it represents unto us the untractable Rustick, or wrangling Disputants, with whom there is no talking without a quarrel: her nealt is by Hedges and Vineyards in Autumn, but in the Winter in hollowtrees; in the Summer-time she layerh up her food against Winter; she will climb fruit-trees, and shake down apples, and then she taketh one in her mouth; and fo rouls her felf up, and flicks the reft upon her prickles, and so carryeth them to the hollow-tree where her neaft is, and that is her food all the Winter: she doth the same in Vineyards, shaking the Vine as long as any grapes will fall off: his hole hath two holes, one towards the North, and another towards the South, which he shutteth North and South, according as the wind is in either of those two corners: sometimes they have two vents, through which nature eafeth her felf; when he

he feeth any one coming to take him, he rouleth himself up, and so secures himself; but when he cannot run away, he urines upon his back, which maketh his skin to rot and putrifie; this he doth for very fear; but some are of a contrary opinion, who think it is because no one should have the benefit of his skin: there is no way to take him fo eafily, as to pour cold water upon him, which will make him unfold himself: his skin is very good to fcour garments with, to brush them from the dust: if he loseth one apple by the way as he carryeth them, he will throw away all the rest, and run to his hole. She knowing that her young ones are full of prickles, the rouleth her felf up, because she would have it as long as she could before she brought forth; but afterwards it is a means to make her bring forth with a great deal more pain and anguish; as oftentimes it hapneth, according to that verse.

Incidit in Scyllam qui vult vitare Charybdin.

Men oftentimes, while they are taking care to avoid a small danger, run into a greater: a fit refemblance of all quarelsome, proud men, who will do nothing peaceably; and it is our wisdome to let such men alone; in vain do we attempt to per-swade them to be nore civil and courteous, when their very nature maketh them otherwise: so we have it in that Verse;

Ου δέπος αν Θεικς λείον τον Αυχνύ έχίνον; Εχ birco lavem nunquam mutabis Echinum.

222 The history of Brutes, or,

Such as was Cain to Abel, and Saul to David; and we may more easily beware of open enemies than dissembling friends: and although the Fox is crafty enough, yet the Hedg-hog doth it by her prickles: the Porcupine some do make to be a wild fort of Swine, which hath larger prickles than the Hedg-hog, which he will shoot out like an arrow, and will with it wound either man or beast: as most of the creatures above-named, so doth this hide himself all the Winter.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of the Beaver.

His is an amphibious creature, hath four feet, L two of a Dog, and two of a Goose: his forepart is harry; he hath a long, broad, ruggid tail, like the tail of a fish; his feet are skinny, which maketh him swim with a great deal of ease; he cannot dive long together, being of very short breath; and therefore is fain often to put his head up above water for air: he biteth very hard, and loveth to be among fishes, or where they are : he may be like a thief in this thing; for he loveth to lye in the way that passengers come oftenest by: he is as big as a large Cat, his testicles have neither a bad scent nor a good, but is very good against the Diseases of the Matrix; and is often given to women with child. Some are of opinion that the Castor knoweth it, and therefore when he is purfued.

fued, biteth them off, because he will not have any one have the benefit of them; which, I think, may be rejected as fabulous: this resembleth those men, who, when in an eminent danger, will part with those things that are dearest to them, if they can but escape. He loveth to be upon the banks of Rivers, and in those places where trees grow close to the water; and there he will sit, with his body in the tree, and his tail in the water: his fubtilty is feen in this, that he will make a tree hollow with his teeth, as if it were made so by art: he will not loose his hold that he hath taken of any man, except he hath broken the bone, or that part that he hath hold of. The tree that he thus holloweth he maketh threce ells in it, one above another; and if it raineth so that the tree is full of water, then he goeth up a flory higher, and according as the water decreaseth or increaseth, so he goeth up higher or lower in the tree; yet fo, that still he may keep his body dry, and his tail in the water: this may teach us to foresee dangers that are coming upon us, and to arm our selves against them.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Of the Otter.

This is also an Amphibions creature, very much resembling the Beaver; there is no great difference as to their outward shape; Pliny saith,

224 The history of Brutes; or,

that the Otter and Beaver are both the same, but in this they differ; the Beaver hath a tail, but the Otter hath no tail at all: he biteth as hard as the Beaver, and hath many other qualities which the Beaver hath. There is a creature which is much like the Otter, called Latax, which hath all his food out of the water : all these creatures, the Beaver, the Martin, the Ferret, &c. are mentioned among those doleful creatures, If. 13. 21. called there by the names of ohim and zihim, by all which, is represented unto us the lives of those who live privately, and folitarily in the World, only looking after what concerneth themselves, meat and drink, not skilled in any Art or Science that may fit them to do their Countrey service: for, as the creatures above-named are very timerous and fearful, shunning the fight of men; fo are these Countrey people, who are strong, but nothing of courage in them; neither are they able to do any service; so that, as Terence said, Homine imperito nihil injustius, nothing is more injurious to men, than when ignorant men are put in place. 1. They live most under ground, and feldome come abroad but in the night-time, when they know all things are quiet and still, and then only when they are forced to it to feek for food: thus is it with common people, who will not take any journey to increase their knowledge, or to serve their Countrey; but to serve their own private ends, holding this tor a Maxime, Bene qui latuit bene vixit, He liveth the best that liveth the privatest life. He nourisheth his young ones alwaies in their houses, or in their holes; like those men that breed their children at home, and never fend them abroad, whereby they might fee the World, because most commonly it is liable to the greatest hazards: moreover, he careth for nothing but food, some of them laying up whole heaps of corn against the Winter: thus do they take thought for nothing, but how to increase their wealth. The Lion is forced daily to feek his prey, when these creatures have food enough in their holes; so that they do not only live in the Winter, which some creatures cannot do for want of food; but they grow fat. Thus Learned men, who have done their Countrey service either in War, or otherwaies, although they are not fo follicitous to get wealth as others are, yet they do seldome want; some of the fore-mentioned creatures will not let the female eat as much as she will, but yet she will find a private way to his heap, and eat as much as she will: fo, those Churles who are so harsh to their Wives, do but endamage themselves by it. These creatures daily change their neafts; fo those men are continually laying up their riches, knowing no end of them. Some are of opinion, that they can fore-fee a storm long before it cometh, and defend themfelves against it. Ferrets will not devour the poultrey in the same house where they live: thus, those people, who although they have no love for their rulers, yet are forced to obey them out of fear. There is another fort of Otter in Egypt, which is called Ichneumon, or the Indian-rat; about the bignels of a Cat, his hairs are as hard as Somes briffels; dwel:

dwelling chiefly amongst hedges; having a great enmity to the Crocodile, as Solinus and Strabo do affirm. The Trochilus, or Wagtail, a creature that goeth into the Crocodiles mouth, and eateth that which sticketh between his teeth, so that he doth, as it were, fcour and cleanse them.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of the Crocodile, Lizard, Salamander, and Stellio.

Lthough all the fore-mentioned creatures be but several forts of Lizards, yet they differ much as to their bigness, and several properties.

Of the Crocodile.

The Crocodile is a creature found only in Egypt; he is an amphibious creature, as are many others belides; which are fit emblemes of the Populh Priests, which are conversant as much in Civil as in Ecclesiastical affairs: it may resemble those men who are of all Religions; when they are among Priests, they will seem to be Priests; if in wicked and prophane company, they will be fo to: if in religious company, they will be religious: it is a four-footed creature, and bringeth forth eggs a little bigger than Goofe-eggs, which she hideth in the earth where they are hatched: there is no creature creature that is, which from so small a bigness, groweth to be such a great creature; he groweth as long as he liveth: he liveth 60 years, and groweth till he be 17, 18, or 20. cubits long: his teeth are more like rakes than teeth, being ertraordinarily big: his skin is fo hard all over his body, (excepting his belly, which is exceeding tender) that he cannot feel the hardest blow. 2. Although he is so exceeding timerous, pursuing none but those which flye from him; and flying as fast from those that do pursue him; yet he may be accounted bold and valiant. When he goeth out for his food, he will fometimes lye still, as if he were dead, or afleep; thus inviting the birds to him, which thinking he is dead, come very near him, flying about him, and when they are within his reach, he taketh them. There is a little Bird which is called in Latine Trochilus, that he suffereth to feed continually in his mouth, because it keeps his teeth clean, by picking out any thing that is between them; like to those men who will do nothing but what may serve their own interest: when the Crocodile wanteth food, and is exceeding hungry, he will fill his mouth full of water, and poureth it upon the beaten path, and so making it very slippery, if any one falleth down, he will catch them before they can rife again: he first eateth the carkass, and then, with tears, he will eat the head; whence came the Proverb, The tears of the Crocodile, which are feigned, and hypocritical. There is a great antipathy between the Crocodile and Ichneumon, or Indian-Rat, which is a kind of Otter, to be found only only in Egypt: when the Crocodile lyeth afleep with his mouth open on the shore, he will go into his mouth, and down his throat into his belly; and that he may the more easily go down, he daubeth himself with mud: the Crocodile awaking, and perceiving the rat in his belly, runneth up and down, fometimes lying down upon the ground, and stretching himself out, then he will go and plunge himself in the water; all this while this little Indian-Rat never mindeth what he doth, but Iyeth in his belly, gnawing of his bowels, (which is very pleasant meat to him,) where he stayeth untill he hath gnawed his way through the Crocodiles fide, which killeth him; but he cometh out alive, without any hurt at all: he is very diligent in feeking out the Crocodiles eggs (from whence some are of opinion, that her name is derived from iχνέυμω, veftigo, to feek,) and when he hath found them, he breaketh them in pieces.

Moreover, it is exceeding ravenous and greedy, and wants the use of his tongue; his fight is dull when in the water, but very quick on the land: it exceedingly fears serpents, for they will lye hid under those herbs which they know the Crocodile most loveth; in all which he much resembleth the Devil; for, I. The Crocodile is a very great creature, amphibious, living either on the land, or in the water, a very cunning, crasty creature. 2. The Crocodile flyeth from those that pursue him, and pursueth those that flye from him: the Devil like, wise dares not stand to encounter with those that resist him by the word and prayer, but eagerly pursueth those that are ignorant of their spiritual weapons.

3. The Crocodile suffers the creature called the Trochilus, quietly to feed in his mouth: the Devil likewise spares one the better, to draw and allure more to himself.

Again, if he can get any thing, he presently devoureth it; so likewise doth the Devil deal by those who follow his temptations. Origen, Contra Celsum, Lib. 3. doth enveigh very bitterly against the Egyptians, who worship the Crocodile as one of their gods; and blames them that they suffer that to live which is such an enemie to mankind.

The enmity that there is between the Indian-Rat and the Crocodile, much refembleth the war and enmity that there is between Christ and the Devil.

1. The Indian-Rat layes traps, and enfinares the Crocodile: Christ likewise destroyes the works of the Devil.

2. The Indian-Rat goeth into the Crocodiles mouth when it is afleep, & eateth his way through his belly, and again cometh forth alive: thus Christ hath conquered death, & rose again the third day,

The Crocodile, were it not destroyed by the Indian-Rat, would over-run those Countreys: the Devil likewise would destroy the World, were he not restrained, and kept in by (brist.

CHAP. XXX.

Of the Salamander, Lizard, and Stellio, &c.

THE Lizard is a creature so well known, that there are sew better known. There is a certain kind of Lizard in Egypt, which is called Sciuncus, or Scineus; but that which we have out of Egypt, called Scineus, is not a true Lizard, but a kind of land-Crocodile, (which is used, by some, to provoke lust,) having his scales growing towards his head; as also, a very white, thin skin.

Moreover, the Lizard hath a very great love to man, infomuch, that whenfoever he feeth any man, he expresseth it by several apish actions, fawning, & wagging his tail like a dog; and when he feeth a ferpent to lye lurking under any herb, (as they often do) he is more active and apish, which he doth to give notice to any one that is palling that waies, that they may defend themselves against it: which is a very fit resemblance of those men who are crafty and mischievous, and make it their bustness to do mischief; yet it is so ordered by divine Providence, that they do even betray themselves! like Balaam, who was forced to bless those whom he would have curfed: and fo it was with Pharaoh, who was forced, against his will, to let the people go; fo that it is verified which Solomon faid, When a mans waies please the Lord, he maketh his very enemies to be at peace with him: and so it happens amongst us, our greatest enemies sometimes being the occasions of our greatest good: and thus much for this creature, which is hatched out of an egg.

The Salamander (Ein Melch) is a kind of a white Lizard, being hatched of an Egg; it is very like the Lizard, having a long, crooked tail, and crooked, sharp feet; his skin is very rough, and rugged, and is said to be of so cold a nature, that he can even put out the fire; but experience teacheth us the contrary; for if he be kept some time in the fire, he is easily burnt, although at the first fight one would think otherwife.

They say, that if he get into a tree, he doth so impoyson the fruit, that it proveth mortal to those who shall eat of it afterwards: and his spittle (as it were) or that which cometh out of his mouth, is of so venomous a quality, that if it chance to light on any one, it maketh the hair to come off; and yet, notwithstanding, Swine will eat it without any hurt to them at all; which fitly resembles wicked men: for, the Salamander (as we said before) is a kind of Lizard: so wicked men likewise, are but the issue and off-spring of the Devil.

And as its spittle makes the bair to fall off; so, the reproaches which wicked men cast on the godly, robs them of that honour and esteem which is due to them. The Salamander is never seen abroad in fair weather: wicked men, in like manner, ought not to be seen in a well-ordered Commonwealth.

Again, he never cometh out of his denn, but in great storms and showers: it is likewise only in times of sedition and rebellion that wicked men dare shew themselves.

E'ν δε διχος ασία Κὶ παγμαμω ερρορε τιμίς, i.e. In troublesome and seditions times, the worst of men are often honoured and promoted, when others are reproach'd and fcorn'd.

The Salamander (they say) hath little spots on his back, like stars: wicked men, in like manner, make fair shews and pretences of Religion, but yet they are good for nothing: wicked men also are born for nothing else but to trouble and perplex their neighbours.

Under this Chapter is to be referred the Stellio, a creature much refembling the Lizard, having thining fpots on his back, refembling flars: they are found chiefly about old houses, and sometimes in new; he chiefly liveth on the dew, and spiders. She casts her skin every year, which she devoureth as soon as she hath done; which some think she doth out of envy; for her skin is good against the Falling sickness. It is a very venomous creature, and bears a great haved to the Scorpion, which she often shews; insomuch, that she cannot endure to see one: which stily resembles wicked men, who put on stars, i.e. a pretence of Religion, when about the most wicked Action.

And, although the Stellio be a venowous creature, yet it cannot endure the Scorpion: thus, we oftentimes see that wicked men cannot agree among themselves, but fall out one with another.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of the Chamelion.

His is a creature very well known, four-footed, and engendred of an Egg; to be found in Afia only; almost like a Lizard: he holdeth his mouth open to take in the air. It is reported of Aristotle, that of all the creatures that he hath described. there is none that is more timerous and crafty than the Chamelion: it is to be found in Africa also, but very rarely, as also in India. His snout is like a Hogs, which routeth up the ground; and although the Chamelion is very much like a Crocodile, yet in this he differeth from him, his tail being much longer, and thicker : he is very crafty and mischievous, although so fearful and timerous. It is a quality of this creature, and of this creature only, that when at any time he is frighted, he, for very fear, changeth himself into the colour of that thing at which he is frighted: the reason of which Bodinus thinketh to be the pellucidness, and transparency of his body; and therefore whatfoever colour is next to him, that colour feemeth to reflect from his body: a fit resemblance of Stage-players, who can be any thing for their profit and advantage : he can change himself into any colour except red and white; which is a fit resemblance of subtile Disputants, who run from one thing to another, to evade evade the force of their adversaries argument. When he is dying he turneth very white, and pale; he can no more be without the cool air, than he can without food: he hath very large lungs, yet when opened, there is nothing found within them. which fitly resembleth flatterers and dissemblers. The Chamelion being a very timerous and fearful creature, changing himself into all colours but red and white: thus, flatterers do live in fear continually, and lest they should be discovered, are sometimes put to their shifts; but they can never endure to behold the truth in its lustre. Moreover, the Chamelion alwaies goeth with his mouth open, and hath large lungs, but nothing within them : thus, these Sycophants and Dissemblers covet nothing so much as the breath of people; who, although they have not the least spark of Religion, yet would seem to have the most: good men had rather be real, than feem to be Religious; but wicked men had rather feem to be Religious, than to be really so: fuch are those that do all things for their own praise, and by their gestures and actions do plainly shew that they would be praised of all men. There is a natural antipathy between the Chamelion and the Crow; which, as often as they meet, the Crow remembreth that poylonous quality that is in the Chamelion; and therefore, before he encounters with him, he eateth a leaf or two of lawrel; and, although he be often wounded in the combat, yet he alwaies is conqueror. That, by the lawrel, is meant true piety and godliness, I suppose no one can be ignorant of it: as the Crow therefore, we fee, tee, overcometh by this lawrel-branch; thus, we can no waies better reject, and conquer flanderers and back-biters, than by an innocent and vertuous life: it hath been the conftant care of godly men to live a godly and religious life; the only way to confute the reproaches that are cast upon them, and to stop the mouths of gainsayers. The Chamelion, when he is dead, groweth pale and white; which Arist. Lib. 1. Eth. cap. 10. doth apply to the life of a man; and saith, that those who depend on fortune, do as often change, and alter their conditions, as the Chamelion doth his colour; sometimes rich, sometimes poor, now happy, anon miserable, &c.

234 The Pillopy of Brutes, or,

2. It may be also not unfitly applyed to Tyrants: the Chamelion goeth very flowly; the like is reported of Nero: Tyrants at first do feign and dissemble piety, but when once they have got the power into their own hands, they then shew what before they did but dissemble, then committing all manner of wickedness. The Chamelion can imitate all manner of colours, like Tyrants, who imitate all mens manners. The Chamelion, when he is a-fraid, seemeth to be very gentle, and mild; like as the Tyrant is sometimes fain to dissemble himself mild, but cannot imitate white and red; i. e. true innocency and modesty; and therefore Nazianzan telleth us, in his 47 th. Oration, of the objection that he made against Julian; Who, with the Chamelion and Proteus could do all things; but yet he could not be mild towards the Christians: it may also resemble those men who study several

Arts

236 The history of Brutes; or,

Arts and Callings, lest one of them should fail. To conclude; as the Chamelion, so these men can imitate the black and evil customes of men, but take no example by good men, not being able to imitate the white and red, i.e. true Vertue and Piety.

CHAP. XXXII.

Of the Frog, and the Toad.

kinds; fome tell us that there are none in the Sea, but only in gardens, and in the fields; fometimes in Ponds and Lakes: those that are more venomous, are called Toads, and are to be found only in holes; which, like the Bat, never come out of their holes but in the night-time. I. Our common Frogs, by their continual croaking, do very much trouble and infest us; which Ovid telleth us of, in his Metans. concerning the Countrey-men that were changed into Frogs.

Quanquam sunt sub aqua, sub aqua maledicere gaudent; Litibus exercent linguas pulsoque pudore.

Their brawling tongues, but setting shame aside; Though hid in water, under water chide.

To which we may fitly compare our clowns, who, when

when in their cups, talk of that which doth not concern them. Aristophanes being to describe the croaking of the Frogs, fetteth it down thus, Epeneneneg noαξ, κοαξ, in which is elegantly fet down, the noise that Frogs make when they croak, the Grecians call a Frog Cpefas, like to our Germane word Brosch, which fignifieth a Frog; but let the fludious fee more of this in Homer, in his Batfaχομυομαχία, the Fable of the War between the Frogs and the Mice. Frogs are commonly taken to be a fign of the approaching Spring; and are thought to be engendred of mud, like Eeles: it is to be observed, that there are most Frogs to be found in a moist year; and therefore, when we see a multitude of Frogs, we may conclude no happy year to follow: but it is to be rejected as fabulous, and ridiculous, which some fay, that they are bred of mud and flime, when we may fee them copulate, and of their sperm or eggs are generated young Frogs; they are not seen to copulate in the day-time, neither can they do it in the water; but yet, by their continual croaking, the male provoketh the female, and both of them wait for the night, that they might the freelier enjoy one another; this they do in the night-time, lest they should be disturbed by men or beasts, and are very much delighted in the act: sometimes men, through carelefness, drink the spawn of the Frogs; whence it is, that fometimes we have feen Frogs to be generated in men, and whether also eggs by the same means, the sperme, or the little worms being eaten with our meat oftentimes, do not breed worms in children

dren, and in men oftentimes, I leave to the more learned to judge. From the spawn of these Frogs are bred other little Frogs, which have long tails at first, but afterwards grow shorter and shorter: in Winter-time they lye hid in holes of the earth: and some fay, that in those Ponds that do not freeze, are Frogs all the Winter; but, as concerning the multitude of Frogs that we have sometimes, there can no other reason be given of it, than what we have for the great company of Locusts that was sent upon the Egyptians, to wit, the immediate hand of God, for our sins. Some are of opinion that they are bred of showers; others, of winds; but, I think, no other reason can be given of this than of the former; like as God once did create out of the Rivers of Egypt great store of Frogs. 4. If we fet a candle lighted on the ground, the Frogs will immediately be filent; they make a great noise when they are in warm water; but if they are cast into a Well that is colder, they are immediately filent. 5. Some do pretend to foretell a shower, by the more than ordinary croaking of Frogs: But, I think, we may more rationally conclude, that Frogs do see the shower hanging in the air, and so prepare themselves for it; they being very much delighted in rain-water, being much sweeter than any other water. It is a common thing for children to get Frogs by a piece of red cloath, and a hook; the Frogs do catch those bees that flye near the water, and, although . they are often stung by them, yet do not feel it. There are some people will eat Frogs, first sleaing them them; and then taking only the hinder parts of them; this may be a fit representation of those who do delight in scandalizing and reproaching their neighbour. Too great multitudes of Frogs are thought, by some, to portend an unhappy year; thus it is with these men who alwaies breed commotions, and are the promoters of dissentions and divisions. If Frogs do croak more than ordinarily, it sheweth the change of weather; thus, when wicked men flourish, and prosper, it is but a bad omen of some alteration for the worse. Frogs are not sensible of the stings of Bees; so great and high are men in their wickedness, that reproofs and advices will do them no good.

Frogs croak only in warm water, but make no noise at all in cold water: thus wicked men are well enough while in a prosperous condition; but, when once affliction cometh, then they cannot bear it.

once affliction cometh, then they cannot bear it.

Rev. 16. 13. And I saw three unclean spirits like Frogs come out of the mouth of the Dragon; that is, Hereticks proceeding out of the mouth of Sathan, such as were formerly the Monks, and at this day the Fesuites, who, by all their reasonings and disputations, do only endeavour to maintain the Popes Supremacy, and his power over all other men whatsoever. 1. If one were to judge of the bigness of a Frog by the noise that it made, and did not see it, we should be ready to conclude that it was some large beast: ignorant people, at first, that do not examine their arguments, and bring them to the touchstone of the Scripture, are ready presently to conclude their arguments unanswerable, when, indeed.

240 The history of Brutes; or, deed, they are nothing less; and like the croaking of Frogs, intending only to weary out their adversaries by the multitude of their arguments, but not to convince them by the force of them; and all to no other end, but to eltablish the Papal Chair. 2. If a Frog be set upon a Golden Stool, it will leap off from it into the mud: thus, Jesuites; if brought to the Scripture, will betake themselves to Philosophical arguments, and creep to the authority of the Fathers, where they think themselves secure. 3. Frogs do not love Wine, but had rather drink water: thus, the Jesuites do tell us, that the Scripture is ambiguous, and chuse rather to trust upon the authority of the Church, than the Scripture it self.

Of the Toad.

A Toad is but a larger kind of land-Frog. 1. They love to dwell in moist places, neither can he endure the light of the Sun; and therefore at daytime he lyeth hid, feldome creeping out but towards night, at which time he is feen alwaies in path-waies. 2. He liveth most under ground, and is nourished chiefly by the vapours of the earth; but yet sometimes he eateth herbs, and worms: some say that he feedeth upon the earth it self; he eateth as much at one time as he can hold in one of his feet: some Authors do conceive that the reason why he eateth no more at one time, is, because he feareth that the earth will not be enough for him; whence came the picture of a covetous old moman standing upon a Toad. 3. The Toad is a veno-venomous creature, and foon angered: if he gerteth hold of any thing that you hold to him, he will not loofe his hold : if he be flruck by any one, he spitteth poyson at them. The spider and the Toad have a great hatred one to the other, yet the spider alwaies hath the better of it; he cometh down by a small web, and lighteth upon his head, and pricketh him, or rather biteth him. It is a known Story, that Conradus Gefner reciteth out of Cardinal Foncetto, concerning the Toad, in these words; One taking up a reed in the field, there was a Toad at one end of it; he perceiving that, threw it out of his hand; and returning home, when he was at dinner, he vomited up all that he eat, neither did any thing stay with him that he took, untill another gave it him; not perceiving the reason of it at first; afterwards, he considered that the Cane which he took in the field was poyfoned, which he found to be fo; the Toad having left a kind of viscous, thick matter, which was not able to pierce the skin, and fo could not prove mortal: thus far Foncettus; and Gesner goeth on further, and reciteth a story out of Matthiolus, and discourseth at large concerning the Toads poysoning of herbs, which he doth by sitting upon them, and sending forth a psysonous moisture upon the leaves, which spreadeth all over the herb, and doth porson the herbs that are next to it; thus far Gesner. We may now consider, a little, the several comnands that God gave to his people Ifrael, about the difference between those creatures that were :lean, and those that were unclean; and that they were not to touch those creatures which are un clean; neither were they to touch any dead care kasses: we read also, how those men that were unclean by the touching of any unclean creature, were to be separated for a time: there were also feveral laws given to the people of Ifrael, concerning their several washings; for those persons that were any waies unclean, and also all the ceremonial laws, had their particular uses, and typical significations, yet they all contained fomething that was moral: and among other things, this may be one, which is in the Story related before: thus we fee in Gardens, the little worms that are upon the herbs and fruit; yet we commonly touch the grass with our hands, and eat fruit, never washing them again before we eat, when we know not what poysonous humors are in the grass that we so freely handle: we see that Cats, Mice, Flyes, and Spiders, do bepifs our clothes, books, meat; and therefore, I think it would be very healthful for us if we used often to wash our hands; but especially, when we have been handling of herbs; unda datur gratis, water is cheap enough; but, verbum sat sapienti. The Toad might be very fitly compared to all envious, cruel, malicious, and tyrannical men: but, I shall not stand here to inlarge any further, or to draw any inferences from the nature of the Toad; we use to say, that, A fool hath as many senses as a Toad hath bairs.

Of the Snail.

This creature is commonly known, and there are feveral kinds of them; fome living in the mater, others on the land, others in marky grounds; it is very much eaten among divers people; if any one eateth but a few of them together, it will bind him; but if a great quantity of them are taken together, then the property of them is quite altered. The nature of Lettuce is the very fame; the Learned Erasmus setcheth a similitude from hence concerning our Study, that there is no mediocrity neither in professing the truth.

2. This creature goeth very flowly, and alwaies carrieth his house along with him wheresoever he goeth; and therefore Apelles, or, as some would have it, Phidias, painted Venus standing in a sheet, to fignifie to us that a woman ought to be alwaies οίχ ερου, that is, that the should not be far from her own house; as it is a great commendation of a man (when we can fay of him, as Horace faith out of Homer, Multorum mores hominum qui videt & urbes;) To have feen the customes of Countreys, and to be acquainted with the manners of men? So is it on the contrary, the greatest honour and glory of a woman to keep at home; the Hebrews do very fitly call a woman NON, Alma quafi occultata, signifying that a woman should not be much in the streets, but to mind her own houshold-affairs; and as it is dangerous for the fnail to go from his house, fo it is not good for women to go far from their own bouses: we may remember sad examples of it in Dinah: the Snail useth the herb called Origanum, or wild Marjoram, against Serpents and Vipers; when he goeth along, he putteth out his horns, to see if the way be sate. 3. If he seeth no body near him, R 2

he will creep out of his shell a little way; but if he feeth any one coming, he presently contra-Steth himself, and getteth into his shell again: we may learn thus much from it, for our instruction, that we should be silent, and say but little; and thus much it may teach us, for our caution, to have a care of our enemies, who do privily lay snares for us when we do not fee them. It is worth our observation, which Plutarch reporteth of the Seafnail; when she layeth her eggs, she goeth out upon the fand, and when she hath covered them with the fand to that they cannot be feen, goeth again into the Sea, and maketh some private mark to find them again by: thus we have fer down the principal qualities of this oviparous creature, covered with a shell; from whence it may have his name Testudo, a Testa; besides these land-snails, there are mater-snails, or Sea-snails, of the several kinds of which, the curious may satisfie themselves, if they look into the treatife which feveral Physitians have written of the nature of this creature. It is reported, that there are very large Snails in the Indian Sea. It is a known story of Æschilus the Poet of Athens, who having a bald head, an Eagle seeing of it, and taking it for a stone, let a shell-fish fall upon it, to break it, which falling upon his head so high, killed him: And the Apologue of the Beafts, and other Creatures that were invited by Jupiter to a Feast, is very well known; all the creatures came together, but only the Snail, who made his excuse to Jupiter in these words, one Φίλω, οίκος & PISTOS: Propria domus, cariffima do-

mus, according to our English Proverb, Home is home, though never so homely. The Ape hateth nothing more than the Snail; but I shall not dilate any further upon this creature.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the Mouse, the Dormouse, and the Mole.

Hele are all of them known creatures; the Comadian calleth the Mouse a wise creature; for he trusteth not himself in one hole alwaies, but hath feveral holes to run into: he compareth them to captives, who, like mice, are fed with other mens food: he hath a very good scent and taste, and is very gluttonous, and will not be contented with a little; he will taste of all things, as cheese, bread, meat, but will eat only of the best: and, as among Birds, the Swallow; fo, of all creatures which live upon the earth, the mouse is the dullest: its urine is exceeding strong and offensive; nay, it will eat the flesh to the bone, if it lye long; and therefore men ought to be careful that nothing they eat be tainted with it. Lemnius, Lib. 2. Chap. 10. telleth us of a mouse that was bred in a man; the reason of which, no doubt, was this, that the mice had cast their sperme upon some of the meat that he had formerly eaten; although Lemnius doth ascribe it to be some filthy humor that lay in his fromack in the winter-time. Those mice that live in woods in Autumn, gather a great deal of corn, insomuch, that sometimes they are so over-laden with it, that he is sain to be drawn along with it by the female; so the female is sometimes so laden, that she is fain to be drawn by the Mule. Elian saith, that mice are not so lively, but that if their guts fall out, they immediately dye; they can live without any thing better than heat; for cold destroyeth them: those mice that live in woods will roul themselves up, and so sleep all Winter; they are often carried in cold weather on hay in baskets. The liver of a monse doth decrease and increase with the Moon. This creature is chiefly to be found in ruined and rotten houses.

There is a Story in Herodotus, Lib. 2. that is worth the perufing; Concerning the King of Egypt, Sethon; This Sethon would not indulge the Egyptian Souldiers so much as the former Kings had done; and therefore, when Senacharib had invaded Egypt, none of the Souldiers would come in to his help; whereupon he implor'd the Oracle, and in a dream it was revealed to him that it should go well with him notwithstanding; he trusting to this, with a few Spartans resolves to meet the Eneanie, and coming neer, in the night-time, they did perceive that a company of field-mice had eaten off the feathers from their arrows, by which they being disabled for fighting, were forced to flye the next day, and were purfued by Sethon, who flew many of them. Afterwards they did erect a Monumerat in bonour of him; with this Inscription;

In me quis intuens pius Esto.

We might deduce several things from the nature of the mouse, from whence we have both caution, and instruction.

1. It may refemble all timerous and fearful creatures, but chiefly, all Parasites and Flatterers, because they are chiefly delighted in stealing, living on other mens charges.

Of the Dormonse.

The bigger fort of mice are called Dormice, called in the Latin, Glis, a gliceftere, i.e. crefcere, to grow, and increase: they consume most part of their time in fleep, which maketh them grow exceeding far. The Dormonse is counted a dainty dish amongit Epicures, so that some do report that they have pulled down houses to find some of them, for the satisfaction of their curious palate. Authors tell us, that the Viper maketh a prey of the Dormouse; and if he findeth a neaft of them, although he cannot eat them all, he will put out the eyes of the rest, and feedeth them untill he can eat them: if these Epicures chance to find these Dormice, and eat them, they are certainly poyloned. Epiphanius, Lib. 2. Tom. 1. contra her. applyeth it to Origen, who being blinded, by the Gracian doctrine, did vomit poyfon to those that believed him: that, what injured him, he did a greater injury with to others: like those, who neglecting the wholsome food of the holy Scriptures, feek to be satisfied rather with Metaphysical, and Scholastical Specula.

and are therefore alwaies seen in great companies together; whence came the Proverb, Currere sicut glires; spoken of those who love to be with their companions at work, or where-ever they be. The Dormonse will fight with those that are not of their company; but they shew a great love to the old ones, and have a great care of them, and provide food for them, and several other waies do shew their love to them: from whence we may learn that reverence and obedience that is due to our Parents; as also, to take heed of over-much sleep, to which these creatures are so very much addicted.

Of the Mole.

The Mole cannot properly be called a monse; he hath no eyes, but is very quick of hearing; but yet if a young one is taken out of the Dams belly, it is plainly perceived to have eyes; he heareth far better under ground, than when above ground; he can hear the worms more under ground at a great distance from him, which doth not proceed so much from the quickness of his hearing, as from the continuity of the moved earth; if there be a hole made in the earth, and a noise be made in it, the Mole will hear it a great way off; as we hear any one speaking through a hollow-pipe better than in the open air; and therefore Males make themselves several holes in the earth, that they may sear any thing that stirreth the better. The worms, a pursued by the Mole, maketh his way above the ground; the Mole is continually under ground, and casteth up the earth, making himself holes to be in therefore we find Virgil speaking to this purpole, Aut oculis capti fodere cubilia talpa.

Some fay that the Mole cannot properly be called an Animal, because he wanteth his eyes, the instruments of the chiefest sense, and a living creature is not so without senses, and therefore the Mole is no creature; it is plain, that they having been diffected, there have been holes found in their heads for eyes, & so they do not want fight per se, but per accident, for they want not the organe of fight; but because they are continually under ground, which blindeth them; nature hath given them a very quick hearing, and fo recompensed them for the want of their fight. The Mole spoyls a great deal of corn that is layed up in Barns; they also will eat Roots, Toads, Serpents. Their nose resembleth a Sows fnout: they cannot live above ground an hour together: their feet are like a hand. This. may fitly resemble all false-hearted persons, who are afraid to come to the test; for, as darkness is dispersed by the light of the Sun, so is falsehood discovered by truth.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Of mix'd four-footed Creatures.

I Itherto we have explained the nature and properties of those creatures that have been begotten gotten by their own species. It remaineth now that we speak of those that are begotten of creatures of diverskinds, which are chiefly to be found in Africa; that being a barren Countrey, and very dry, several kind of beasts drinking at one River: wherefore it cometh to pass, that creatures of several kinds copulate one with another: Hence cometh those divers mix'd creatures, as the Leopard, the Mule: the Leopard is generated of the Libard and the Lioness: The Lion being of a hot temper, doth not so often copulate; but the Lioness is a very leacherous creature, and therefore she sufferesh her self to be covered with a Libard: when she groweth big, she runneth into the Mountains, as if she went to take her prey, that there the might bring forth without any danger. She bringeth forth a Leopard, a creature like a Lion, and a Libard; which, if the Lion find, he teareth in pieces; but to prevent it, the Lioness alwaies bringeth forth in some solitary place. Thus, the Camelopardalis, a creature like the Camel, and the Panther, is generated by them two: fo, the Mule of the Asse and the Mare; and sometimes of the Bull and the Affe: so, sometimes Dogs are generated of the Fox and Dog, and sometimes of the Wolf and the Dog: thus is the Lypopanther begot of the Wolf and Panther: so also in Rhætia there is oftentimes a creature generated of the Ram, and the-Goat, his fore-parts resembling a Sheep, and his hinder-parts a Goat; and I wish that these mix'd coitus were to be found among beafts only; for we find even men too often guilty of it. Plutarch rela-relateth of one Plinius, who faith that he himfelf faw a Crocodile lying with a woman: other examples might be brought to illustrate this; as, of the Girl that was born of a Man and a she-Ass: but fuch births are so ordered by Divine Providence, that they never live long; neither do they alwayes beget again, though sometimes they do fo. Herodorus, Lie. 4. faith, that in the Babilonifh Siege, as also in Xernes army, a Mule brought forth most commonly. There may be a reason given of most Monsters; so, as Plutarch saith concerning Thales Milesius, who was invited to a Feast, with other grave Seniors, to the house of one Periandrus; there was for one dish a little Infant brought in, that was begotten of a Man and a Mare; his head, neck, and hands, were like other childrens, and his cry was also the same; but all his other parts were like a horse; several gave their opinions concerning it: Diocles judged it to be a miracle, or prodigie, portending diffentions, wars, and divifions: but Thales was of another opinion, and advised them, that all who looked after horses should be married men; for they committed this horrid, beaftly act, for want of Wives. Sabellicus relateth, in his 7th. Book, Ennead. 6. under Martin the 4th. P. R. of one who was a-kin to the Pope, that brought forth a hairy boy, who had claws like a Bear: he was very much troubled at it, and commanded the pictures of Bears to be pulled down in all places. Those men are much to be blamed, who at Featts do disguise themselves in frightful vizards, the fight of which may prove exceeding dan dangerous: when as we ought earnestly to implore Heaven that we may not be punished with such deformed children; for the fight of such things do very strangely work upon the fancy of women with child:hence it is, that oftentimes when women look upon hares, they bring forth their children with hare-lips; so, some have brought forth their young ones with horns, feeing the picture of Actaon, who was turned into a Hart: and therefore we have horses of divers colours, when the Mare standeth in a Stable where she seeth hangings of feveral colours. We read of a Birch that lying continually in the foft wool of a Ram, brought forth her puppies with a main. Thus Damascene relateth of a woman, who, continually almost, looking upon the picture of John the Baptist, brought forth her child hairy all over its body. Quintilian cleared a woman who was accused for lying with her servant, because the infant was black, when he found the image of an Æthiopian in her chamber. There are five things go to the making up of a mixt creature, (man, not being content with the ordinary course of Nature, first invented those promiscuous couplings of one creature with another.)

I. Those creatures that thus copulate must not be much bigger one than another; therefore it is that the dog and the horse cannot copulate, but the Wolf and the Dog; the Asse and the Horse, the Lion and the Panther: and hence it is that man, by a horrible ast against nature, hath copulated with Mares, Swine, &c.

2. Those creatures cannot copulate together 2

when one carries their young longer than the other; therefore a Dog cannot be begotten of a Woman, nor a horse by an Elephant; for a woman carryeth her infant nine moneths, but a Bitch not above seven.

3. They must be prone to lust, such as are Dogs,

Goats, Swine, Affes, &c.

4. It must be done at a convenient time, which, with most creatures, is the Spring; for so it hath been found by experience, that some creatures are more leacherous at one time of the year than at another; for there are very sew creatures which at all times are equally prone to luft.

5. It is necessary that they be both young, that fo the one may be the better able to give seed, and the other to receive it: and, although it be thus qualified, yet they do not do it voluntarily, but are compelled unto it by those that look after them, that so they may have new sorts of creatures. But, the reason why the Ancients used to compell creatures to these promiscuous couplings was, that those creatures were much stronger than other creatures which are not so generated. In India formerly those Dogs which were begotten of a Tyger were incredibly strong, and very fierce. Thus Philes, that wife King, as also Alian maketh mention of an Indian Dog of Alexander's the Great, that was presented to him by an Indian King, which Alexander commanded should be brought upon the Stage, and that a great Bore should be let loose upon him; the Dog would not stir, as scorning to meddle with it, thinking it was not worthy of his anger: not long after, a Bear was brought upon the Stage; the Dog looked upon him, but would not stir: last of all was brought a Lion; the Dog, as foon as he faw him, flyeth at him, and bit him fo hard, that he made his teeth meet, and there held him: Alexander commanded that one of his legs should be cut off; the Dog endured it with so much courage as if it had not been his own leg that had been cut off; another of his legs was cut off, and fo a third; and then they cut off the other also, the Dog yet keeping his hold; but afterwards they cut off his head; yet his teeth were as hard fet together as when he was alive: we may judge of other creatures by what hath been faid of this. And as, although all right lines are equal, yet crooked lines differ one from another, and there are many forts of them; fo that it is impossible to set down the several kinds of them; Thus, I think, it is a very difficult thing to fet down the feveral forts of mix'd Creatures; and therefore I have spoken only of the Camelopardalis, the Leopard, and the Mule : of which last I am now to speak. It is a noted Story which Plutarch and Elian relate of a Mule that was loaden with falt, if he went through any water that was fo deep that the falt was wet, he found it grew lighter and lighter every day than other: the next time he went through any water, he plunged himfelf in over head and ears: Thales the next day commanded that he fhould be loaden with spunges, which he perceiving to grow heavier by being dipped in the water, would never lye down in the water any more when

A Description of living Creatures. 253 he was loaden with falt. Herodotus faith, that Crass was called a Mule by the Oracle, because. his Father was a Persian, and his Mother a Lydian: but he not understanding it, could not believe that that Oracle should so highly affront him, on whom he had bestowed so many gifts: but his misunderstanding of the Oracle had like to have been his ruine: the more curious may read the Story at large in the Book of Herodotus. I noted before, out of Ælian, concerning the Indian Apes, which they could not bring into their Cities, because of their leacherousnes; nay, they could hardly be kept off from affaulting the women themselves: and therefore, those Monsters that we have now been speaking of are not alwaies mir aculous: and therefore I very much commend the judgement of Thales, in Plutarch, of whom we spake but a little above. These creatures may resemble those men who either in the Church, or in a War, own neither side, but stand as Neuters. The Jews were forbidden to let their Cattel gender with divers kinds, Lev. 19. They were also forbid to till their fields with an Oxe and an Asse together; and as they were not to sow the ground with mixed grain; so, neither were they to wear a garment made of linnen and moollen: by all which we are to learn what we read, Mat. 6. 16. to avoid the leaven of the Pharifees, which the Pfalmift exponndeth thus, that we should not stand in the counsel of the ungodly: In former times the Grecians condemned those persons to dye, who in time of War, or any other disturbance, did not take one side or another; but because the Mule

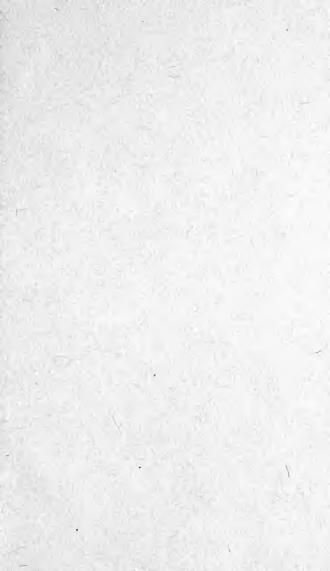

256 The Pillozy of Brutes, or,

Mule is more known than any of the former, I shall. speak to it by way of corollary, and draw two or three inferences from the nature of it. 1. The Mule is neither a Horse nor an Ass, but between both: fo, those which stand Neuters in a cause, are neither hot not cold, as is said in the Apocalyps. Chap. 5. But yet it is added also there, that she should be either hot or cold: Moreover, Mules are barren; so these hypocrites are barren and empty of all that is good. Males do carry very great burthens: those men likewise that do stand neuter, are oftentimes troubled and vexed by both sides, like to those men that Poneanes speaketh of, who have a room one Story high; they are troubled with those above them, who sometime, pour water upon their heads; and with the smoak of them below. And thus we have finished the first part of our Discourse, wherein we have spoken to the nature and properties of four-footed Creatures.
